

ACCIDENTS ON RAILWAYS ARE GROWING LESS

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 21.—The field of railroad operation is growing less hazardous and the grade crossing safer to the public according to interesting statistics assembled by R. J. Clancy, assistant to general manager in charge of safety for the Southern Pacific company.

The "Stop—Look—Listen" campaign inaugurated by the road and followed up persistently has brought about a reduction in grade crossing casualties in the face of a large increase in the number of automobiles in use in the territory traversed by the Southern Pacific lines. Whereas in the first six months of 1918 there were 23 people killed and 85 injured at grade crossings, during the same period in 1919 there were 17 killed and 80 injured and for the first six months of this year fatalities were reduced to 13 and 61 injuries.

This achievement in accident prevention is regarded particularly noteworthy in view of the fact that about two-thirds of the mileage of the Southern Pacific is in territory where climatic conditions permit motoring every day in the year and the range of automobiles per capita of population is among the highest in the United States. California rivals all states, having now about one-tenth of all the automobiles of the country.

The comparison of casualties to employees, reportable to the interstate commission for the first six months of the years noted shows:

	Killed	Injured
1918	29	1436
1919	29	1239
1920	20	1129

Computed on the basis of locomotive miles and man-hours these casualties show less than one fatality per 1,000,000 locomotive miles and 3,000,000 man-hours in the first six months of this year.
