REPORTER GOT HIS, AS USUAL

"The public be damned."

Most people have heard that phrase not so many years ago exemplifying the attitude of certain railroad magnates. Few, however, know when it was first used, and how it was coined into a catch phrase.

The story is told by Charles Chapin, the famous city editor of the New York Evening World who is now serving a term of life imprisonment in Sing Sing prison. It appears in his book "Charles Chapin's Story," just published, which describes his extraordinarily varied career and the tragic events which terminated it.

"I recall that memorable night at the Chicago Tribune office when a reporter who had been sent to interview W. K. Vanderbilt, strolled languidly into the office and reported that the railroad magnate refused to talk," writes Chapin. "It was just at the time when a crowd of financial pirates had paralleled the Vanderbilt line between Chicago and Buffalo with the Nickle Plate Road, and were holding him up to buy it from them."

"I was there chatting with Ted Colles, the night editor. After reporting 'no story' the reporter sat down to chat with some poker players to whom he casually remarked that in answer to his request for an interview as a matter of 'great public interest,' Vanderbilt had snapped out at him, 'The public be damned!' pushing him out of the car and slamming the door in his face."

"That was enough for the night editor. The most striking story on the front page that morning was headed 'The Public be Damned,' and the expression has been going ever since."

FOREST FIRES RAISE PRICE OF LUMBER

WASHINGTON, Sept. 30.—Every time there is a forest fire it is a contributing factor to the increasing price of lumber, according to Charles Lathrop Pack, president of the American Forestry association, who, in a statement here today announced the needless $30,000,000 annual forest fire loss of the United States as "a wasteful strain upon the resources of the nation." Standing timber is burning out and destroyed by fire, diseases and insects, he said, more than four times as fast as new trees are being grown.

"Here is an example of what confronts the nation," declared Mr. Pack. "The wholesale prices on upper grades of soft wood lumber in New York were from $30 to $35 a thousand feet prior to 1865, when mills in the same state supplied the market, from $35 to $45 between 1865 and 1917 when most of the supply came from the lake states and the south, and are now entering a general level of $130 a thousand feet with a large part of the material coming from the Pacific coast."

"Many industries have been unable to secure their supplies of timber at any price. The output of certain entire industries has been reduced as much as 50 per cent. Necessities have fared worse than luxuries. The ramifications of lumber shortage and high prices are limited and have affected seriously practically our entire population."

Mr. Pack, as the head of the organization keenly interested in conserving the nation's forests, prefaced his statement with the hope that fire prevention would be "preached" in every school in the land on Friday, October 8, the day before fire prevention day proclaimed by President Wilson, when the teachers are expected to inform their pupils of unnecessary fire hazards and to help reduce the country's total annual fire loss of $250,000,000.
