

REPUBLICANS WORKING FOR SENATE CONTROL

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 5.—While election of a president seems the principal concern of the voters, party managers are quietly but strenuously striving for control of the next congress, and particularly of the senate.

Success or failure of the next national administration depends on whether a majority of the senate is of the same political complexion as the new president. If Governor Cox is elected (which seems extremely doubtful now with the failure of the governor's campaign fund charges and the verdict rendered in Maine) and the next senate is Republican, the Cox administration would largely be a failure because a Republican senate would refuse to agree to some of the Cox policies, particularly the league of nations, which the governor hung around his neck at the beginning of the campaign. On the other hand, if Senator Harding is elected (which seems highly probable, not to say certain, in the judgment of experienced Washington political observers) a Democratic senate would hamper his administration.

The Republicans now have a majority of two in the senate, 49 to 47. They hope to increase this lead in November. The terms of 32 senators expire next March 4. Seventeen are Democrats; 15 Republicans. Election of Democratic senatorial candidates is conceded by the republican managers in seven states of the "solid south"—Florida, Louisiana, Arkansas, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and Alabama. Democrats concede five states—Towa, Kansas, Vermont, Washington and Pennsylvania—to the Republican senatorial candidates. This leaves 20 states that are so-called "debatable ground." These states are, Connecticut, Oregon, Kentucky, Oklahoma, North Dakota, Nevada, New Hampshire, California, Maryland, Indiana, Ohio, South Dakota, Wisconsin, Idaho, Illinois, Arizona, Missouri, Utah, Colorado and New York. A careful analysis of the senatorial situation in these states, made by your correspondent, from reliable data gathered here, gives the following results:

The states that will very probably elect Republican senatorial candidates are Connecticut, Oregon, North Dakota, Nevada, New Hampshire, Indiana, Ohio, South Dakota, Wisconsin, Idaho, Illinois, Arizona, Utah, Maryland and New York—total 15.

The states that may or may not elect Democratic senatorial candidates are Kentucky, Oklahoma, Missouri, California and Colorado—total 5.

The Republicans have high hopes of Kentucky as the state administration, headed by Governor Morrow, is Republican. Oklahoma has nearly always been found in the Democratic column. Missouri is normally Democratic. So is Colorado. Though there are more registered Republican voters in California than Democrats, Democratic leaders claim reelection of their candidate, Senator Phelan.

This computation would give the Republicans in the "debatable states" 15 senators and the Democrats five. It would give the Republicans 20 senators, including those from the five states already conceded by the Democrats. The Democrats would win, including the seven states conceded by the Republicans, a total of 12.

If these predictions become realities in November, and these estimates are very reasonable, the next senate will have 55 Republicans and 41 Democrats—a Republican majority of 14, to back up Senator Harding's policies when he enters the white house next March.

Representative Simeon D. Fess, Ohio, chairman of the national Republican congressional committee, is more conservative in his estimate. He says the Republican majority in the next senate will be at least 10.

Senator Miles Poindexter, chairman of the Republican senatorial committee believes the Republican majority will be from 12 to 14.

EDITORIAL

Did you ever notice how peculiar most of us humans are in the matter of side-stepping? The man who can't play golf dubs it "an old man's game," the chap who can't dance will side step a two-step and ask his partner to "sit it out" with him; the man who never had the pluck or price to go to Europe shouts "See America First." One of the firmest policies of this firm is not to side step. Every day in our advertising we tell you what we have, and we tell you the whole truth not half-truths. We don't claim to be infallible—all we can do is to try to have everything you want just when you want it and at prices that are reasonable. We step straight ahead successfully, because we never side step.

COATS

Of original designing, there's character in every fold of this season's coats—there's character in the large collars of fur or cloth—in every row of stitching and buttons. Materials are rich in weave—Frost Glow, Tinseltone, Silvertone, Duvetyne, Siberian and Peach Bloom. Colorings are rich—Walnut, Mallard, Titian, French Blue, deepest Browns and Navys. And just as worthy as the outside are the linings of these Coats—exquisitely patterned silks in original colorings. Priced from $22.50 to $120.00.

SUITS—Plain Tailored Types For "Types."

Admirable—exquisite—tailoring and finishing characterize these models, with fine linings, perfect fit, and vagaries of tailored trimmings, such as tucking in design, clever button arrangements, unique braiding, enhancing the effects. Priced from $48.50 to $185.00.

DRESSES

But this is not to be exclusively a suit season. One-piece Dresses are attracting equal attention. And the modes displayed are positively wonderful. If one looks best in a straight-lined dress, she may wear it and feel assured of being correctly attired. If a dress of softer outline is more becoming one of the gracefully draped or tunic models would be the logical choice. For the street there are Tricotines, Serges, Tricolettes and Jerseys. For afternoon, distinctive Satins, Charmeuse, Silks and Tricolettes, beautifully trimmed. Priced from $15.65 to $90.00.
