UNIQUE OFFICE BUILDING IS ON MARKET

LONDON, Sept. 15. (By Mail).—The most unique office building in London, for more than quarter of a century the business headquarters and home of the late Lord William Waldorf Astor, is to be sold. Built at a cost of more than $1,000,000 this office-palace occupied one of the most commanding positions on the famous embankment.

Architects have called it the most original structure of its kind in the world, in that it combines many of the inspirations of the old world with all the modern devices of present-day business. It is constructed of gray stone, in Tudor style and never has any building offered such discouragement to burglars. A strong, though artistic iron railing surrounds the house, all the many windows have iron bars and entrance can only be obtained through a massive gateway of bronze.

Above it all is a little gilt galleon, in full sail, an exact model of the caravel in which Columbus crossed the seas, a happy reminder, as someone has pointed out "of the American-made wealth which made the splendid building possible."

When one enters the offices he is confronted by a magnificent carved staircase which occupies the greater portion of the center of the house. Oak beams, mahogany panelling, marble floors abound throughout and many of the fittings have been declared priceless by experts.

The house holds many rare treasures. Among the most important are the folio Shakespeare, the first edition of Spenser, a 16th century book of colored maps, many inlaid tables and cabinets and a ponderous four-poster bed with Gobelins hangings.

Although used as both a residence and office, several enthusiasts are urging that it be purchased by the city of London as a permanent home for the London city museum, so well could it be adapted to public use.

The first Lord Astor spent much of his time in the building, managing his American properties from here and directing his newspaper, the Pall Mall Gazette. After his death, the volume of business to be transacted, became less and the present Lord Astor having no use for the building it is to be sold but will always be a monument to the memory and personality of the late William Waldorf Astor.
