The Rezell straw vote has now entered upon its second week and already the figures are reaching out toward the million mark. The ballots, which are issued daily, are being read by millions of persons when posted on the windows of the eight thousand Rezell Drug stores throughout the country, for none, seemingly, is too busy at this time not to pause and gain the last and most authoritative word on the temper of the public with regard to the forthcoming presidential election.

The machinery for handling this nationwide straw vote is the most thoroughly equipped and best organized that ever has been employed in any previous attempt to forecast a national election. In the neighborhood of twenty-five thousand messages, mail, telegraphic and telephonic, are daily employed to get the returns into the Boston office of the United Drug company which, in turn, compiles the figures and prints the bulletins which go to the eight thousand Rezell Drug stores each night. Aside from this source of circulation, these bulletins go to about fifteen hundred individuals, for the most part men and women prominently identified with the campaign of the two dominant political parties. Hundreds of newspapers also receive these returns and publish them daily.

As the United Drug company is receiving its returns from all the Rezell Drug stores, as well as from all the Liggett stores in the country, this means that the ballots are being cast in every big city and in nearly every town in every state in the United States.

In each store two ballot boxes have been installed—one for men, the other for women. A clerk in each store watches over the ballot boxes and exerts every effort to see that the ballots are fairly cast; that there are no repeats, and that the boxes are free from the taint of "being stuffed." The straw vote is designed as an honest effort to get and disseminate the honest opinion of the voters of the country as to their preference for the presidency. No bias, or prejudice is permitted to creep into this test vote, for absolute fairness and impartiality is its keystone.

Each night the ballots are counted and the total for each store is sent to a central point in that state to the state captain, who compiles the total vote for his state. After telegraphing this total to the director of the straw vote in the offices of the United Drug company in Boston, the state captain sends back the total figures for his state to all drugists in that state. This is the routine followed in each of the forty-eight states.

A large force of experts is employed in the Boston office to handle the vote and publish the bulletins. Every care is taken to check the figures and expert accountants perform this task. As soon as the vote for the nation is compiled this copy is rushed to the United Drug company's own printing plant where one press is held at the disposal of the straw vote director and from which the bulletins are turned out by the thousands.

The finished bulletins go to the mail-room where an equally large force pitches in and encloses one bulletin in each of the ninety-five hundred addressed envelopes. When sealed and stamped this huge bundle of letters is rushed directly to the Boston postoffice and the daily bulletin starts on its journey to the waiting stockholders. This adroit procedure will be followed throughout the month of October.

REPUBLICAN SENATE

Presidential nominee Harding went to Iowa to speak for Senator Albert B. Cummins, who is ill and unable to campaign. This shows not only the bigness of the presidential candidate since he will not desert a friend but it also shows the concern of Mr. Harding is a republican majority in the United States senate. Mr. Harding is a senator himself and he knows that the success or failure of his administration for the next four years depends upon having a safe working majority in the senate. The fact is that the republican majority of one in the senate is in peril.

Mark Sullivan, a political writer of democratic tendencies, but nevertheless one of the shrewdest and most accurate political reporters in the country, writes in the Oregonian of October 5, from Council Bluffs Iowa:

"The truth is, this Iowa case is merely another example of the fact, that, however the presidential election may go, the republicans are going to have the hardest kind of a fight to get a safe majority in the senate.

"When you find so strong a figure as Cummins compelled to fight for his life in a state where he has been governor or senator continuously for the last 19 years, a state which as the late Senator Dolliver expressed it, "will go democratic when hell goes Methodist"—then you

The secret of such high-quality in the Brunswick Phonograph

The Brunswick is a 100 per cent Brunswick product, not assembled. Parts are not bought here and there. Cabinets are not picked up from different builders.

Brunswick controls every process, every detail. From the raw wood to the final finishing, Brunswick decides the standards.

This accounts for the all-round goodness of The Brunswick—the freedom from flaws, the everlasting uniformity.

Brunswick is not dependent on fluctuating conditions outside. And need not make compromises. This is not a new policy. But it has been one of the old-time ideals of the House of Brunswick.

Since 1845 Brunswick has been building to meet the highest standards—no woodcrafting organization in the world is more famous.

In every Brunswick Phonograph we include the Brunswick idea of high quality. No instrument goes out without complete inspection.
