

At the Theaters

LIBERTY THEATRE:
Father's wearing "soup-and-fish" again, and Maggie is dressed up fit to kill because she's going to the Astor ball reception to meet the social lion, the Count de Spoo. The count was a late arrival—he was held up by his laundry. Father thought the party needed jazzing up a bit, so he introduced his own social lion. He had four paws and was the property of a circus.

From father's point of view, the party was a great success. Those who attend the Liberty theatre where "Jiggs and the Social Lion" are on view tonight will signify approval with roars of laughter. It's the newest "Bringing Up Father" comedy with Johnny Ray as our hero, Mr. Jiggs.

An American secret-service agent going into a nest of a revolutionary Tong in the interior of Mongolia, becoming a "hatchetman" and participating in the secret meetings of the wily Chinese, was the job undertaken by Bruce Winthrop in "The Pagan God." H. B. Warner's production made for Robinson-Cole and distributed by Exhibitors Mutual.

In order to find out the inner workings of the "Tong of Freedom," Winthrop pretends to have deserted his own people—become a renegade, in fact—and is so stigmatized by the American consul at Nanching, who did not know Winthrop's mission in Mongolia.

"You're deserting your country's service for alien, yellow gold!" he snorted. "It's damned near treason!" Beautiful Beryl Addison, Winthrop's sweetheart, thought the same. "You are not worthy of the love of any woman if you do this thing," she declared.

But Bruce kept his lips sealed, for the lives of thousands of Americans were at stake, and duty was stronger than love. To be a traitor in the eyes of the woman he loved, and to pretend to reciprocate the love of a passionate and ambitious half-caste adventuress, galled his spirit. But the end justified the means, though his life hung in the balance and the love he cherished above everything in the world seemed lost to him.

Warner has a difficult role in this production, but he portrays the character superbly and is always master of the situation.

STAR THEATRE:

There is promise of exceptional entertainment at the Star theatre tonight when Elaine Hammerstein in "The Woman Game" will be offered as the feature attraction.

From a story by Leighton Owen and Frank Dazey, G. Marion Burton, one of the ablest of present day writers for the motion picture screen, has provided a scenario said to possess unusual strength. The authors have gone into the commonplace walks of life for typical incidents about which is weaved some real drama, powerful in its appeal but portrayed in the most natural way imaginable—without crime, cheap sensation, or startling action.

"The Woman Game" of the title is merely the game, as old as life itself, which women are always playing in their own behalf or in behalf of those they love. The big interest in the picture lies in its showing up this game so that all those who are playing it unconsciously are able to understand it—and its complete justification.

If you have grown hard and superficial and self-centered, if the taste of life has become like ashes upon our lips, see "Humoresque," Cosmopolitan production's greatest photoplay of mother-love, and be cured.

"My wonder boy!" cries Vera Gordon, and cuddles a large-eyed boy with sensitive lips. From that moment your heart vibrates between the adoring mother and the big-eyed genius boy.

The boy plays upon your heart as his bow upon the strings of the violin. The mother raises you to such heights of sympathetic joy and plunges you into such depths of anguish that you seem to have been born anew. You never suspected yourself of such capacity for the extremes of feeling.

Which is saying in other terms that "Humoresque" is a work of the highest order of talent, perhaps genius and that it is interpreted by superb talent, perhaps genius.

Fannie Hurst's greatest short story has been turned into "pictures." Vera Gordon, the greatest of stage mothers and Gaston Glass, who seems to have been born to play thrillingly human geniuses, have made her story live on the screen. They have made the story visible. More "Humoresque" is an audible motion picture. The cry "My wonder boy" haunts you. It follows you home. You hear it in the night watches, exulting, appealing, praying, triumphing. Yes, will be at the Star Thursday and Friday.

LOCAL JEWELER BRINGS SUIT AGAINST MRS. LABEREE

H. J. Winters today filed a suit in circuit court against Mrs. Anita Laberee for alleged non-payment of a bill of $55 contracted by her in the former's jewelry store about a year ago. Plaintiff asks for judgment against defendant for the amount of the bill plus interest at 6 per cent. Mrs. Laberee is the central figure in the Laberee will contest case now being heard in the probate court.

HIS BLINDNESS NO HANDICAP

English Botanist Rose to Heights of Fame, Though Sight Failed Him in Early Life.

Mr. J. G. Wilkinson, the famous blind botanist, lost his sight in his early life. "During all my painting," he said, "I had always been much attracted by trees and plants, so I got Percy Grimshaw to take me to the Temple Newsam woods, outside Leeds, to a favorite beech tree there, and I asked him to pluck for me a leaf of it. He did so, and with my tongue I began to touch every part of this leaf, and so got its various details and characteristics thoroughly into my head, till I was sure I could recognize a beech leaf anywhere. From that I began studying leaves from other trees in a similar manner, until I could pick out any of them at once from the mixed lot you gave me. . . . Now (I hope I may say it with all modesty), there is not a leaf, stem, fruit or flower of any plant or tree in the British islands which I do not know, and should not be able to recognize immediately I had touched it with my tongue, even if not with my hands."
