

First Modern Barber's Chair Used Here Is Again in Active Use

The superintendent's job at the county hospital embraces a number of trades and crafts. Besides being chief nurse, head porter, chief steward, supervising architect and a few other things, J. H. Short is also head barber. Since time immemorial the tonsorial equipment at the hospital has consisted of a tin basin and a rough board chair with a reclining back, but Short has become such an artist with the razor that he decided the other day that such primitive furniture did not match up with his talents.

Now he has a fine upholstered hydraulic chair and a porcelain basin with hot and cold water, and is fast transforming his masculine patients into a bunch of dudes. He hasn't said yet when he will install a hair-dressing and manicuring parlor.

The barber chair, by the way, has a history. It was the first chair with a hydraulic lift brought to Klamath Falls. Its immediate predecessor was a chair that revolved but did not lift. Back of that one was a chair that had a reclining adjustment but did not revolve. When these two were supplanted by a chair with both reclining and lifting adjustments it was thought that the height of luxury had been scaled. For some time the old chair has been reposing in Jimmy Swannson's basement. Short dug it up, dusted it off, paid $25 for it, and on a small scale its installation at the hospital created the same furore that its arrival in Klamath Falls did fifteen or twenty years ago.

Don't forget that we are serving a REGULAR Merchants' Lunch every day, including everything from soup to nuts. We only charge 40c for it, but it's worth a lot more.

Some guy left a pair of rubbers here the other day. He'd better come and get them or I'll charge him storage. A fellow was in here the other day and said we were sure handing out some good eats. I told him to spring something new on us— We always served good meals.
