

PENS PICTURE OF GERMAN SUPER MAN

LONDON, March 10. (By Mail).—Hugo Stinnes, generalissimo of German industry, recently accused of plotting a strike of several hundred thousand workers in the Ruhr district to make more difficult the Allied occupation of Dusseldorf, Duisburg and Ruhrort, is referred to by the Berlin correspondent of the Times as "an earnest and dangerous patriot."

Stinnes, a multi-millionaire member of the Reichstag, has put through some of the greatest financial deals of his career since the armistice. He has been called "a relentlessly efficient, human calculating machine." It has been said that he would sacrifice every mark of his enormous fortune to bring back the monarchy.

Mine-owner and coal merchant, ship-owner, landed proprietor, head of a great chain of newspapers, proprietor of the finest hotel in Berlin, trader in oils, paper, hides, jute, peat and manufactured wares of many kinds, Stinnes, the Times correspondent says, "is today the wealthiest, most influential, best-known, and at the same time the least well-known man in Germany."

Publicity and notoriety are alien to him, it is stated, and he prefers to remain behind the curtains in the Reichstag, permitting his henchmen and lieutenants to do the talking he pulls the strings.

"There is nothing in his appearance to betray the man of genius," says the correspondent. "Just fifty years old, of medium height and sturdily built, with black hair and beard that show up strongly against a rather sallow complexion, Hugo Stinnes is an inconspicuous figure as he slips in and out of the Adlon hotel, his bowler hat tilted delightfully on one side, one hand in his pocket, and one or two secretaries following hard on the heels of their chief in his well-worn black coat and black tie. He stops to speak to no one. He has no time for small talk in the lounge with other guests. He is a relentlessly efficient, cool, human, calculating machine."

The foundations of the Stinnes fortune were laid by the present Stinnes' grandfather and increased by his father. The youth was sent to a gymnasium and later worked as a miner and attended the School of Mines in Berlin. Embarking in business for himself at the age of 23, his remarkable career began. He went with success into the coal and iron trade, becoming a prominent figure among the magnates of Rhenish Westphalia and branched out into the development of tramways and electric power in the coal fields.

But his "real great spring to fortune," says the Times, "came with the great war."

"His fortune before the war was estimated at $40,000,000 gold marks. What it is now he probably could not say himself—possibly 1,000,000,000 marks." Newspapers now owned by Stinnes are said to number at least 60.

"People are eagerly asking with what ultimate object all this colossal wealth is being incessantly piled up," says the Times correspondent. "Does his present association with and financing of the Volkspartei mean that Stinnes is preparing to bring back the monarchy?"

"Stinnes," concludes the correspondent, referring to the alleged truculent conduct of the financier at the Brussels Financial Conference, "has measured himself once with Allies and received a severe snubbing. He is not likely to risk a second similar rebuff. Nor is he likely to forget. Let the Allies in their turn remember that, witness his unconciliating manner of the conference table, he is an earnest and dangerous patriot."
