

OREGON SYSTEM LAWS ALL HELD BEYOND ATTACK

Supreme Court Decision in Newberry Case Declared to Prove Strength of Local Statutes.

Herald Salem Bureau
SALEM, Or., May 16.—(Special)—Any doubt that may have existed about the power of the Oregon primary and corrupt practices laws, or their ability to stand up in any court, is brushed away by the decision of the United States supreme court in the Newberry case. Senator Truman H. Newberry was prosecuted and convicted under the federal corrupt practices act. The United States supreme court set aside the conviction and declared the federal corrupt practices act unconstitutional.

Relative to the Oregon corrupt practices act the following reflections, backed by the best legal minds of the land, serve to establish its unquestioned potency.

The federal constitution is a grant of power. Congress may enact such laws as the constitution says it may enact, and no other. The federal constitution does not say congress may enact a corrupt law. Hence the law was declared unconstitutional in the Newberry case.

Law Plainly Sanctioned
The state constitution, unlike the federal constitution, is a limitation of power. That the state legislature may enact any law that is not expressly or by plain implication prohibited by Oregon or the United States constitution. There is no prohibition in the constitution against a state corrupt practices act. This alone would serve to give validity to the Oregon law, even if the state constitution did not go further. But it does go further, and expressly directs the legislature to enact legislation to prevent corrupt practices relative to elections. (Article 2, sections 7 and 8.)

The Oregon corrupt practices act then has the plain sanction of the state constitution and does not conflict with the federal constitution.

In the decision of the United States supreme court, however, there was a division of opinion, with four of the nine justices holding the federal corrupt practices act constitutional. They were Chief Justice White and Associated Justices Pitney, Clarke and Brandeis.

Opinions Differ
They, apparently were reasoning under article 1, section 4, of the federal constitution, which provides that "the times, places and manner of holding elections for senators and representatives shall be prescribed in each state by the legislature thereof; but the congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulation, except as to the places of choosing senators."

Apparently the four justices held that this section would warrant congress in imposing a federal corrupt practices act. The other five judges apparently held that such an interpretation would give congress a power over primary elections, which under the 70th amendment to the federal constitution, the direct election amendment, it is not supposed to have.

According to press dispatches, the court's decision was that the direct election amendment does not affect article 1 of section 4, which, the majority opinion said, while it gives congress the power to regulate the manner of holding elections, does not confer on its authority to control primaries or conventions.

To determine the cause of a recent wreck on a Pennsylvania railroad, a mock collision was staged. As a result of the limitation wreck officials were able to determine against which road claims should be filed because of that road's negligence.
