WHY FIGHT FOR UPPER SILESIA IS SO BITTER

WASHINGTON, June 5. (Special correspondence)—The importance of Upper Silesia to the contending powers, Germany and Poland, is due mainly to the fact that the exploitable coal reserves in that territory are estimated to be about 41,000,000,000 tons. In the Polish view the possession or non-possession of Upper Silesia means the difference between having to import more than half its normal coal requirements, and being one of the most important coal exporting countries of Europe. Poland argues that if she possesses these coal fields she can exchange coal for the German manufacturers and technical equipment needed for the development of her resources.

The coal deposits in that quarter of Europe lie in the Dombrowa-Silesian Basin, covering 2100 square miles and extending into Poland, Czechoslovakia and Silesia. Poland controls about one-third this area, while about 60 per cent of it lies in Upper Silesia. The exploitable coal reserves of Poland are estimated at 22,000,000,000 tons, her production in 1913 was about 9,000,000 tons, and her consumption 19,000,000 tons, of which about two-fifths was imported from Upper Silesia. Probably pre-war restrictions under which Poland labored, prevented the proper development of her own reserves.

It is important to note that should Germany restore her production to the pre-war level she would be able to meet the allied requirements of 23,000,000 tons annually fixed by the Spa agreement, and still have supplies for domestic use, but if, added to the coal territory which she has already lost, Germany should be compelled to relinquish the Silesian fields, despite the plebiscite recently taken, she would be seriously handicapped in her economic development.

In this connection it is important to remember that Germany has finally agreed to meet the indemnity laid on her by the Allies of over $32,000,000,000, to say nothing of private claims which must be exacted from her. These payments are to be made with interest. To meet this indemnity the protocol provides for the issue of three series of bonds, and declares that "until redemption of the bonds Germany will be required to pay yearly 2,000,000,000 gold marks and 26 per cent of the value of her exports as from May 1.

Germany is primarily a manufacturing nation. Scrap her industries, or seriously interfere with her coal supply and she could no more pay her indemnity than one could extract blood from a turnip. Lloyd George recognized this when, in speaking of the proposed occupation of the Ruhr district by the French, he said:

"With the Ruhr district gone, industrial Germany withers; it can not exist."

The whole financial fabric of Europe at the present time depends in a large degree on Germany's payment of the indemnity. Should she be compelled to default in that there would be a world panic. Moreover, the debts owing to the United States by Europe would thus be indefinitely delayed in payment, perhaps repudiated in turn.

Expectations of European financiers to the contrary, it is questionable if large amounts of the German indemnity bonds will find a market in the United States. Certainly none could be disposed of here or elsewhere if the impression were general that German industrialism might suffer inanition through lack of fuel supply. Whatever twisted interpretation may be given to the Silesian plebiscite, it is manifest, therefore, that Germany must have coal if the Allies are to have gold in payment of the indemnity. Germany, having been that he will not confirm him until the chief of police matter is settled." Vollmer broke in to say that he would not confirm Wilson and that "there was no chief of police."

"There is my appointment, H. Wilson, and why refuse to confirm him," was the mayor's answer.

"I do not consider him a chief of police, or even an excuse for one," was the quick retort from Vollmer, and for a moment it looked like action would follow, but the mayor called for the council to proceed. The result of the squabble was the repudiation of all the bills presented by the chief of police. Patrolman McDonald's salary was steam rolled to $3 a day and from then on no flare-ups came.

Fourth Committee Favored

Following the tilt over police matters, the Fourth of July committee presented a petition to the council asking permission to have Main street from 4th to 8th set aside for the carnival and amusements on the 4th and 5th days of July, the creating of a boxing commission, also the right to govern the amusement licenses for those two days. Consent was given by the council for the requests of the petitioners.

TOO MUCH

SOME STORAGE BATTERY FACTS: You might as well say that you can buy an automobile for $200 as to say that you can buy a battery for $30. One signifies just as much as the other. Voltage counts for nothing when it comes to the capacity of a battery. The ampre hour capacity is what counts. The larger the battery the greater the ampre hour capacity and necessarily the greater the cost. We could build you a six volt battery for $2 that you could wear for a watch' charm, it wouldn't run your car but it would be six volts just the same. Investigate LUTHY it will pay.
