CAMPS CONTAINS 1727 INTERNS

Irish Political Prisoners Fill Internment Camp at Ballykinlar, Ireland.

BALLYKINLAR, Ireland, June 20.—The internment camp for Irish political prisoners established here last November is now filled with 1727 men. It was originally used as a training camp for Ulster troops in the war and is divided into two enclosures which are called "cages." Within each of these are rows of brown huts and an extensive recreation ground, the whole ringed about thickly with barbed wire and overlooked by a number of high sentry boxes.

There have been no escapes from Ballykinlar and no attempted breaks. "Tunnelling would be impossible," an officer said, "because the water comes close to the surface of the ground."

The men are housed 25 to a hut, each being provided with a plank bed, straw mattress and four blankets.

The Associated Press correspondent and a representative of an English news agency were the first newspaper men ever allowed to visit the camp, which is about 30 miles from Belfast. Scarcely a drearier spot is to be found in Ireland. The camp is pitched on a flat which is swept by all the winds that sport on Dundrum Bay. "We have a lot of rain here," said one of the British army officers in charge. "We get the maximum rainfall."

The prisoners were shy on the newspaper men. Joseph McGrath, a member of parliament from a Dublin district, a prisoner who holds the post of the Irish "Supervisor of Internees," voiced his distrust of the correspondents who sought to interview him about prison conditions.

"How do I know who you are?" he asked. "Any outsider allowed to come into this camp is bound to be suspect from our point of view. You could not come unless the military authorities consented."

"Even if you are what you say you are, anything I told you would be subject to censorship before you were allowed to publish it. I am willing to give you a written statement if you can undertake to print it as submitted. The Irish people will never learn the truth about conditions here until we are released and can tell them ourselves."

Except for supervision by the military authorities, the prisoners "run their own show." They are organized in units of about 100 each under a company captain. Each of the two cages has a supervisor of internees who, until a few weeks ago, was known as "Camp Commandant." The prisoners had regular military drill daily and, according to Mr. McGrath, they were "ready for rifle practice," when the authorities put a stop to the drilling and changed the titles of the "commandants" to something less military in sound.
