HARD TIMES PSYCHOLOGY

After all, "hard times" is more imaginary than real, more of a mental than a physical condition. There is more money in the country today than ever before in the world's history, for the mints each year coin millions, and very little is actually lost or destroyed.

Why should people hide their money away and refuse to invest it? The answer is fear, fear. Many men who would risk their lives in combat with an enemy, get scared at the rumor of "hard times" or "panic," and sit on their hoarded treasure tighter than an old hen on three eggs. If fear were removed, they would make investments and put their money into circulation as in normal times, and times would, in fact, be normal because of it. If all the money hoarded away in this country were invested in legitimate enterprises, every concern from the bootblack stand to the million dollar bank would experience a veritable boom.

Suppose one of our embryonic oil wells should develop a gusher tomorrow; how the money would come out of hiding and be clamoring for investment, even in wild-cat securities! Times would, in fact, be no better, but the mental attitude would be changed, nothing more. If this psychology, this mental condition, would function normally—in other words if the human element of fear were eliminated—there would be no hard times and no boom times, but the channels of commerce would flow as evenly as the Japan current.

By waving a rag one can stampede a herd of cattle over a precipice to their utter destruction. Even so, a few financial highlanders, by the cry of "panic" can stampede a hundred million people into activity, want and ruin, and, vulture-like, prey upon the disabled and wounded.

Of course every community has a certain element, a small aggregation of miserly old nestors, who always think and talk "hard times." They take advantage of the unearned increment which results from the enterprises of others, never contributing anything of their own, nor even giving a penny to charity.

They even evade the payment of taxes, their just contribution towards the support of the government which protects them and their property. "They loan their hoarded gains at cent per cent and take a lars lent." Of all the persons doing business with them the undertaker is the only one who ever gets a square deal.

And Dean Swift wrote an appropriate epitaph, which should speedily be used for all of them.

"Here lies old thirty-five per cent. The more he made the less he spent;

The more he got the more he craved.

Great God! Can such a soul be saved;"

Co-Operation Is Need in Fight on The Pine Beetle

the present infested one, the gross aggregate damage of the pest cannot be casually estimated. Another destructive agency upon the bug is its natural enemies and they fall in large numbers prey to this source of destruction.

The forest department method of controlling the situation lays in the despatch of "bug cruisers" to infested districts who at once locate the beetles by noticing the foliage, pitch exudations on the trunks and by chopping into suspected trees near old damage. The cruiser knows that the damage by the pine beetle occurs in the form of scattered trees over large areas and therefore must be constantly on the search for the different sections where ravages are taking place. The rapid migration of the bug is made possible by the fact that this species are strong fliers.

The second action taken is the felling of the infested timber containing the beetles in the late spring before they emerge from their winter quarters to go to other trees. The next step taken is to have the bark peeled from the felled timber and burned. As it is an established fact that bark is such a poor conductor of heat, it would be useless to try to burn the tree and make a kill, for the heat does not go completely through as it does when the bark is removed and the fire hits both sides at once and is better able to be reduced to an ash.

Big Appropriation Pending
United States Senator McNary on June 15 of this year introduced senate bill 2084, making appropriations for the prevention of timber from insect infestations on reserved and unreserved public lands in Oregon and California while a companion bill was introduced in the house of representatives on the same date by Congressman Sinnott. The bills provide for an appropriation of $60,000 to be immediately available for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, to enable the secretary of agriculture to prevent further loss of timber from insect infestations within the national forests of Oregon and California. Also the sum of $90,000 for the same fiscal period to enable the secretary of interior to work either independently or in cooperation with the secretary of agriculture to prevent further losses from this bug pest, on Indian reservations or United States lands whose titles was requested under the provisions of the act of June 9, 1916, also on unreserved lands in Oregon and California.

This appropriation carries a clause whereby the owners of pine beetle timber land adjacent to or intermingled with lands owned or administered by the United States shall satisfy the secretary of agriculture that the insect infestations on adjacent and intermingled lands will be abated, either in accordance with the state laws or voluntarily by the owners of such lands, to an extent that the United States holdings will be free from reinfestation—and after this survey is satisfactorily made from both sources, the secretary of agriculture shall so certify this to the secretary of the interior.

The approximate damage done by the pine beetle on an area estimated at one million and a quarter acres is roughly placed at one and one-half billion feet, with an estimate of 10,000,000,000 board feet in the total area. It is estimated that $30,000,000 worth of timber can be saved from destruction using the conservative estimate of $3 per 1000 feet as a basis of calculation.

An article in the Herald tomorrow will throw additional light upon this problem and undertaking which Mr. Jaenicke has been sent to Klamath county to accomplish.

Insurance Man Says Portland Prospers

"When times tighten in other lines of business, the insurance man is more likely to find ears open to his arguments and hands ready to sign policy applications than when business is expanding" said J. M. Day, manager of the Oregon district for the New York Life Insurance company, who has been here visiting the local agents, B. W. Gregory and P. E. Burke. Mr. Day left yesterday for Ashland.

Because of this peculiar condition, Mr. Day said that his business had shown no decline in revenue.

Portland is prospering, he said, and is one of the few cities that has not seriously felt the post-war slump. The railways running into the city have agreed to start immediately to spend $2,000,000 on terminal yards and the $200,000 union depot will be built at once. Besides releasing a lot of money for circulation in Portland, these projects show the confidence of the railway heads in the future of the city and state, said Mr. Day, and reflect the general feeling that prosperity and progress have not been retarded in the general readjustment.

Make that idle dollar work! Put it in the bank.
