QUEER SEA SPECIMEN

VENNICE, Cal., Aug. 10.—A strange specimen of marine life which for several days on exhibit here has not been classified in any of the three groups of fish, fowl or good red-herring, has been identified at last as a crustacean fern. The plant, which for a time here was thought to be a new form of "sea monster," came ashore as a result, it is thought, of a marine disturbance which evidently damaged the marine gardens known to lie off the Venice shore. Other specimens of ferns have been torn loose and a collection has been made for scientific study and exhibition.

NINE CROPS OF CLOVER

REDDING, Cal., Aug. 10.—G. H. Crooks Happy Valley farmer, believes he will be close to a record in clover raising at the end of the year as he has cut six crops thus far and is confident he will be able to harvest three more.

Make that idle dollar work! Put it in the bank.
