ARE COLLEGES ENCOURAGING RACE SUICIDE?

BOSTON, Aug. 31.—Is race suicide increasing among college graduates? Maurice Ricker of the United States Public Health Service says that it is, and quotes statistics. Some college presidents are inclined to doubt the conclusions drawn by the Health Service official and think his figures give a wrong impression. Others say that from lack of statistics of their own, they are not prepared to discuss the subject. They admit that Mr. Ricker's figures are startling and that they present a disquieting view of the future.

Addressing the recent convention of the National Educational Association in Des Moines, Ia., Mr. Ricker was quoted as follows: "Investigation by the federal public health service over a period of years indicates that the progeny of one thousand graduates from such institutions as Harvard, Yale, Princeton, Vassar and Smith will not exceed fifty in 100 years from now." He proceeded to compare the results of a similar canvass among illiterate foreigners and said it indicated that in like period the original thousand would be multiplied at least a hundred times.

Frederick L. Allen, secretary of the Harvard University Corporation produced some figures of his own from the Harvard records. He said: "Mr. Ricker's assertion would seem at first reading to give the impression that college students have on the average less than one child apiece. This is not so among Harvard graduates at any rate. Among the classes 1881-90 at Harvard, the last ten classes whose statistics are available and may be considered fairly complete, the average number of men per class of 248, of whom 183 married and had 372 children, an average of 2.06 children per married graduate, or 1.55 children per capita for the whole class. The Yale figures for the same period are similar. The birthrate among Harvard graduates declined during the past half century. The decline however, was less sharp in the class between 1870 and 1880 than it had been previously; and a situation which is disquieting at best, seems thus to be showing a gradual tendency to right itself."

No figures on the subject are available from Wellesley College, but President Ellen S. Pendleton gives it as her impression that as far as the alumnae of Wellesley are concerned, the number of marriages and the number of children per marriage have increased rather than decreased as the years have gone by. "Some twenty or more years ago," said Miss Pendleton, "The Association of Collegiate Alumnae gathered quite elaborate statistics comparing the health, number of marriages and number of children per marriage of college women with similar statistics of their sisters who did not go to college or their cousins nearest their age. These statistics showed that there was very slight differences between the two classes, but such difference as there was, was in favor of the college bred women, and as I have said while we have no recent figures my impression is that there are more marriages and more children per marriage in these later years."

"No one denies that college women marry later in life than non-college women and consequently any statistics that are made up on the basis of women not more than five years out of college would give an entirely wrong impression. I suspect that the same thing would be true of college men."

An article for the Smith Alumnae Quarterly and based on The Quinquennial Catalogue of 1915 is offered as the latest available information regarding the graduates of Smith College and their children. This gave the average number of children for each of the total number of alumnae (5962, with the class of 1915 omitted) as 56. The average of children for each marriage in the classes numbered '79 to '85 was 2.15. This decreased with later classes until the average for each marriage from 1879 up to 1915 was only 1.34. The compiler, Florence Homer Snow, of the class of 1904 suggests that if the figures seem small, arguments for the defense include the facts that the youngest classes are the largest, and that many college women marry late so that the figures regarding them are not available until they have been many years out of college.
