Amundsen's Ship Anchored, Seattle

SEATTLE, Wash., Oct. 24.—The staunch little exploring ship Maud, in which Captain Roald Amundsen made the northeast passage from Norway to Cape Serdze, Siberia, has been moored temporarily in the fresh waters of Lake Union here. The Maud was towed from Puget Sound through the government canal to Lake Union after she had been overhauled in drydock where a lost propeller was replaced.

The sturdy craft will remain in the landlocked harbor, ridding herself of barnacles, until early next spring when Captain Amundsen expects to renew his attempt to drift past the North Pole with the Arctic ice floes, interrupted last year by the loss of the Maud's propeller.

In the meantime, Captain Amundsen has announced, he will make a brief visit to Norway, his home.
