

CONFIDENCE OF OIL MEN RENEWED

to speak. He gave a brief but thoroughly comprehensive account of the work done on the Siemens well, the difficulties encountered in penetrating the various formations and the gravitation from hope to fear and back again as these difficulties were encountered and surmounted. He pointed out that whereas the stock in that company had originally been offered at one hundred dollars a share, it was now rated at one thousand dollars and that there was not any for sale even at that price.

Other speakers were W. W. Baldwin, of the Baldwin Hardware Co., O. D. Burke, of the First National Bank, Attorney Mills, Geo. B. Chamberlain, present manager of the company and E. M. Hammond, the well known rancher.

The latter electrified the meeting and seemed to sense the general feeling extant when he said: "I have listened carefully to everything said here tonight. I am not an oil man. Just a sheep herder—sheep is my business, but I will say this emphatically—I have not yet sold my wool but if I can trade it for Crater Oil stock, you can rely upon my doing it."

It was not possible for Geologist Rhoads to be present last night but he sent a letter which was read by Dr. Goddard. It was much in the nature of a report on present conditions, and in the opinion of those present removed any doubt, if it ever existed, of the presence of oil in Klamath Basin.

No attempt was made to dispose of any stock last night but the Merrill people will be waited upon later by a company representative for that purpose. The general feeling at the conclusion of the meeting was that little difficulty would be experienced in the further financing of the company.

OREGON AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE, CORVALLIS, Nov. 11.—Major General W. M. Wright, commander of the 9th corps area, and acting chief of staff in the world war, who inspected the R. O. T. MUST NOT SPEED-UP FOR NINTH STREET GRADE

Traffic Officer McLaughlin has stated that orders have been issued to stop the reckless pace which autoists use when going up Ninth street in the evenings. Some of the motorists within the past few days have "speeded up" for the Ninth street grade so that a car crossing the intersections would have little chance of evading the oncoming car at the best and fatalities may result unless the practice is abandoned.

Our Boys

Down to the sounding sea,
And over the rolling wave,
Went forth the sons of the mighty West
The stricken lands to save;
No coward's voice was heard to chide,
No craven sought to lag,
As o'er the shell-torn fields of France
They marched with the starry flag.

No terrors of the Argonne wood,
Nor mud of the noisome trench,
Nor death, nor the shriek of bursting shell
Could the fire of their ardent quest,
And they marched as Caesar marched,
And with his legions won,
O'er the self-same fields of Gaul
To smite the barbarous Hun.

Did the Marquis thrill in his moldy bed
When the general said, "We're here!"
But the stubborn Teuton, under his spike,
Trembled with sudden fear,
For he saw before his serried hosts
The Allied Armies meet,
And he knew that the men from over the sea,
Had never known defeat.

To-day as heroes we welcome them
To farm, to shop, to mill,
In the war with wrong, as in Argonne,
They'll fight with an equal will.
Unspoiled by honors bravely won
Their glory shall never cease—
The spirit that led in the ball of war
Shall triumph on fields of peace.
—Capt. O. C. Applegate.
