

WORLD'S EYES ON CONFERENCE

By ROBT. E. SMITH, President of The Lumbermen's Trust Company Bank of Portland

Eyes of the financial and business world are turned November 12th on Washington, where President Harding's Disarmament Conference is holding its initial session. It is now quite generally understood that whatever is accomplished will be economic in its effects, and will influence the lives and prosperity of the peoples of all the civilized world.

Norman Hapgood writes that on a correct decision being reached, much of the world's future hangs and that the interesting thing about this point of view now is that it is absolutely the prevailing mood. No such feeling prevailed in Paris, and the forthcoming conference is held to be of far more importance.

H. G. Wells has already set down his opinion that the world is slipping, slipping back, and that the whole structure of civilization is in imminent peril. Wells lifts his powerful voice to rouse people out of their complacent interest in petty affairs, and to focus their attention on the transcendent significance of the approaching parleys. The gloomy Englishman declares it nothing short of criminal for people to occupy themselves with small personal interests when the happiness of mankind is in the balance.

Roger Babson, says, in effect, that bonds of European nations may be worth all they promise by what the conference does, or may be made worthless.

There is no doubt that much of the buoyancy that has lately been experienced by business in the United States is the result of the effects of the Disarmament Conference having been favorably discounted. President Harding recently issued a warning that too much should not be expected. He said that the most that could reasonably be hoped for was some sort of an agreement in the direction of a partial reduction of armies and navies.

The situation holds many perils; there is a possibility of a clash of national aims and ambitions which cannot be reconciled, and that the conference break up in a dispute. There is danger, if the sessions end with nothing accomplished, that a panicky feeling will sweep the world.

UNIVERSITY NOTES

EUGENE, Nov. 12.—(Special) The largest crowd ever assembled to see an athletic event in Oregon is expected to gather in Eugene on November 19, when Oregon and O. A. C. will clash on Hayward field as the feature of the annual Homecoming festivities of the University. An entire new section of grandstand seats is now being constructed in a circular shape around one end of Hayward field, giving the field the appearance of a huge saucer shaped stadium. This section together with other seating arrangements will give Hayward field a seating capacity of 15,000 people.

It's a long hard road to the degree of doctor of philosophy at the University of Oregon. But at that it is fairly well traveled. There are 63 students doing graduate work this year.

For the first time since 1917 and despite an increase in rates Jack Benefiel, graduate manager of the University of Oregon, has secured special railroad rates on all roads in Oregon for the hundreds of alumni and former students who will journey to Eugene November 18-20 for the annual Homecoming.

QUAIL SO PLENTIFUL THEY VISIT IN TOWN

D. V. Michaelson of Sacramento was a tourist here this morning who claims that he saw more quail between the Keno river and Link river bridges than at any other place between Sacramento and Ashland during his trip.

Feeding in the road about one mile east of the Keno river bridge, Michaelson claims that he counted 227 birds in one flock that were sunning, feeding and dusting themselves in the highway. About 200 yards south of the Automobile camping grounds, right in town, the fence in one place was lined with 8 quail. When the machine was stopped to admire and photograph the bunch the birds seemed curious to know what was going to take place and remained until an excellent series of pictures were taken.

J. A. Bushong, who resides on the Keno road, was in town Saturday after supplies for his ranch.
