

ARCHDEACON SPEAKS

Evolution of Religion to Community Work Pointed Out

That love of one's neighbor is the essence and heart of religion and that the expression of community spirit as evidenced in efforts to improve conditions, thereby benefiting everyone, is the truest evidence of that love, was emphasized by the Rev. Dr. George Van Waters, archdeacon of Eastern Oregon, in a forceful address before the Chamber of Commerce forum today.

The address placed before the members in a new light the importance of community work and the development of community spirit. The speaker pointed out that in the golden age of Klamath Falls is in the future, not in the past; that the mistakes of the past should be forgotten and every effort directed toward building for the future. Nations or communities that dwell in the past cannot progress, he said.

O. D. Burke presided at the meeting, which was well attended. Secretary T. A. Stevenson made a brief report of the progress made by the chamber in carrying out the work planned for the year.
