Very few people compel their mammoth rate of cedar logs may be guests to sleep in the coal shed or towed across the Pacific ocean to Japan this centing summer, according to R. Azumato, a log buyer for Love at first sight may be all Japanese concerns, who announced right, but it doesn't cost a cent to the plan here recently. Azumato believes the feat could be accomplished during the favorable weather that ordinarily prevails during the sum-

Japan is now enjoying a building boom, fostered by the imperial government. The tariff on finished tumber is so high that its importation is impracticable, and the lumber shipped from the United States commonly goes in the form of "Jap Squares," the lower tariff rate to be sawed in to lumber by Japanese milis

"It is expensive to ship lumber in any form to Japan." Mr. Arumato said, "and rafting it across the Pacific would save much money.
