

The Office Cat

BY JUNIUS

MUCH ADD ABOUT NOTHING
The tenant arose, with a weary groan
And shivered once or twice;
The radiator was cold as stone
'Neath its coat of glistening ice
And as he shivered, he scratched his head.
Then rubbed his frost-nipped nose.
"Shall I crawl back in my nice warm bed?"
He sighed, "I put on my clothes!"
He groped around till he found the shade.
Then held up an old receipt;
"See, I was right," he said, "I paid
For a furnished flat, with heat!"
To the telephone this luckless hick
Then sped with flying feet.
And proceeded to make a first-class kick
About the lack of heat.
"Why kick on th' heat?" asked the janitor kink.
His manner was droll and quaint;
Then he proceeded: "I really think
You've no ground for complaint!"
The fellow who can crank a Ford
In winter and keep sweet, could
He down and let a pet snake crawl in
Over his naked body, opines Roy Wright.
Joe the Plodder says it doesn't pay
To be crooked. Even the cork screw
Is out of a job.
"Na" spelled backwards is "On."
The way to road "No" is NOT from
The left, but from the right.
If you wish to avoid the annoyance
Of being pestered by your relatives,
Spend your money as you get it.
A New Yorker is a person so ignorant
Of gardening matters that when you
Speak of weeds he thinks you are
Referring to a make of skid chains,
Says Louis Hoagland.

How much it is best to show."

Observation.
