

IF WASHINGTON WERE PRESIDENT NOW

Descendant of the Family Tells What George Would Think and Do Today

WILLIAM L. WASHINGTON

If George Washington were president today what would he do? This question was put to William Lanier Washington, a direct descendant of one of George Washington's brothers. He answers it in this special article written for The Evening Herald. Washington is the hereditary representative of his distinguished forbear in the Society of the Cincinnati.

BY WILLIAM LANIER WASHINGTON

NEW YORK, Feb. 22.—If George Washington were president today he would look upon the disarmament conference as the greatest step toward a better civilization in the world's history.

He would see in it the beginning of a great world movement that will bring nations to a better understanding.

He would recognize a changed condition that would require a closer alliance between the United States and Great Britain, in particular, and France.

This would not be a political alliance, but a defensive alliance by which these countries could stand together and protect each other and the weaker nations of the world.

If Washington were here today he would find the American woman superior to her grandmother in initiative, physical development and independent thought. He would be proud of her.

It is not generally known that George Washington held the country's record in the running broad jump. It wasn't exceeded until 1883. He was also a fine wrestler, and enjoyed most every sport.

If he were here today he would undoubtedly be interested in baseball, football and other clean, healthy games of the American youth.

Always abreast of the times and often a bit ahead, President Washington would have had the greatest innovations of the age in the White House.

He was the first man in the country to use the letter press, and one of the first to use a gold pen in writing. There is no doubt that he would have his home equipped with every known utility ranging from electrical household appliances to a wireless telephone.

If he were a bit younger, he probably would be an ardent aviator.

He would be a regular patron of the opera, the theatre and the better class of moving picture—and possibly an occasional visitor to the circus. In expense books rigidly kept by the president are entries for many tickets bought for the circus—usually in blocks of six. He always made sure that members of his household enjoyed themselves as well as he.

He would be the most popular man of the times.

"DAMON AND PYTHIAS" IS GREAT FILM OF FRIENDSHIP

"A friend is the first person to come in when all the world has gone out."

Four hundred years before the dawn of the Christian era, the drama of "Damon and Pythias" was enacted and has lived and grown down through all ages until it is the foremost theme in the world today upon which universal peace may be founded.

It is this sublime story that is unfolded in the absorbing and soulful photo drama of "Damon and Pythias."

Spectacular, stirring, gripping are its scenes: laid in Greece in the pomp and glory of her greatest day, with its colossal groupings, classic dances, games, the thrill of the chariot race, battles upon sea and land, cities built and destroyed, and through all this, with dramatic fire and touch of sentiment runs the story of human friendship and its lesson of man's humanity to man.

Never before in the history of pictured plays have scenes of such magnificence and grandeur met the camera.

Because of its appealing story, its deep and inspiring love interests, its nearness to all that is human, its educational and uplifting influences, it is a picture all will want to see. It is the picture presentation of a story of friendship that has lived through all the ages—it is a photoplay that will never die.

This magnificent picture will be shown at the Strand theater tonight, under the auspices of the local lodge, Knights of Pythias, for two performances, the first beginning at 6:30 and the last about 8:30. There will be a matinee tomorrow afternoon.

The pianist at the Strand has selected special music to accompany the picture.
