GROWING POWER

HERE'S a new balance of power in politics, in fact it is tipping the balance and growing rapidly into power liself.

Politics in this connection is not to be defined as blind partisanship, but in the wider sense -a force for social, economic and moral develop-

The new power is not yet fully awake to the might of the ballot but the realization is coming.

The women of the nation are go ing to be reckoned with in the practical application of future political

Women have always been a power in politics. Formerly their power was wielded unseen-s power behind the throne. The influence was not always for the best, but offimes it has been sufficient to change the course of empires.

But in the American political seens the women voters are casting off the shackles of past traditions and are openly playing the part with men in shaping the better course of governmental policy.

Before women acquired the ballot, the home training of a wise and good mother shaped the destiny of many a statesmen, the wife's counsel swayed the official decision of many a husband toward the better side.
