WHY NOT TRY?

WHEN a man like Otto Kahn puts himself on record, as he does in the paragraph we are about to quote, it would seem as if even nations might yet be willing for their own sake to try the experiment of doing unto others as they would like to have others do to them. Governments have never dared make such a venture, though Heaven's honor is pledged to its success, says the editor of Our Dumb Animals. This is what Kahn says:

"I am a Wall Street man, supposedly conservative in my underlying instincts. The world has tried for years now a policy of timid cautiousness and fear which has left the world in an awful mess. How would it be if the world tried a policy of audacious kindness, mercy, and faith? I say let us throw our purse, our hearts, and our brains open all around, mentally, actually, and morally. And what will happen? I think something very much better than has happened in the last three years."

This may well be followed by a recent word of Lloyd George:

"Do give us another chance of talking together; of appealing to reason, and see whether the old sense of brotherhood, that is at the bottom of all the human race, will not end in grasping hands and in friendly co-operation with the rest, and not in conflicts that bring disaster and ruin upon all."

LAWYERS

Modesto (Cal.) Herald

Taft's declaration at the National Conference of the Bar Association that this country has about all the lawyers it needs, will not strike concern in the hearts of those who are either training to join the profession or hope to at some ripe age. The assertion was in the nature of a direct rebuke of the growing fraternity of "abysser" lawyers.

The laws of a country are not necessarily made by lawyers, but they are interpreted by them. Since this is the case, a more thorough training of embryo lawyers may have a very good effect on the whole system of society.

Lincoln was one lawyer in a million who encouraged men to avoid litigation and settle their disputes out of court if they possibly could. With a growing complexity of society more and more people are finding it necessary to go to court for some reason or other. The result is that many men live and depend upon the disputes of others to provide them with the necessities and luxuries of life.

However, there are still some men who are anxious to improve the morale of the legal profession. And one of the ways to do it, they find, is to make the training of a lawyer so severe that there shall be some process of elimination early in the ranks of an overgrown profession.
