SECRETARY FALL MAKES ATTACK ON FORESTRY POLICY

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 7.—The public lands of the United States should be under full control either of the department of the interior or of the agricultural department, and not partially under both, as at present, Secretary Fall said Monday, discussing the controversy being about the question of jurisdiction over the forest service.

Bills are pending in congress for the transfer of forest reserves, especially in Alaska, now controlled through the forest service by the department of agriculture, to the interior department, because of the oil and mineral deposits in the reserves. This legislation has led to considerable controversy.

Secretary Fall in making his position clear on the question, attacked what he termed the "propaganda campaign" of the American Forestry association against his policy with regard to forest reserves on the public domain in Alaska. Secretary Fall said he did not want it understood that he opposed the forest policy of the forest service. He said, however, that he was opposed to selling timber from the public domain to China and Japan, that he would not permit any of the timber thus cut to be taken out of the United States, and that he would not permit the cutting of timber at the headwaters of rivers.

The secretary added that he did not charge that the forest service was cutting timber for the purpose of selling it to China and Japan, but that this was the ultimate disposition of a great deal of timber which has been cut for commercial purposes in this country.

The interior department, Secretary Fall said, has under the law jurisdiction over all public lands of the United States with the exception of the forests on such lands, and has control even over these forest lands with respect to everything except the timber.

As the dual control works out in practice, he declared two surveys are made whenever mineral or oil land which happened to be on a forest reserve comes up for entry or lease, one by the land office and one by the forest service before the patent can be granted by the interior department.

The forest service, he said, will not accept the land office survey. Although the interior department has full control over all of its lands, he said, the forest service "steps in to determine whether there is oil or not."

"If congress does not think the interior department should do this work, then it should give the work to the department of agriculture, so only one department should have it," the secretary added. The secretary of the interior, Fall said, had recently been the target of the American Forestry association and the forest service of the agricultural department in connection with bills before congress before development of Alaska and the transfer of all control of the public domain to the interior department.

In a letter written to the chairman of one of the principal commissions of the house of representatives (the name was withheld) Secretary Fall disclosed that recently when out of the city he had given telegraphic permission to his assistant secretary at the latter's urging to bring to the attention of President Harding the "impropriety (to say the least) of the activities of the forest service and Gifford Pinchot of the American Forestry association in making a 'vicious and unwarranted attack upon the head of a co-ordinate department of the government'."

Secretary Fall quoted in the letter an article by Colonel E. B. Greeley, chief of the forest service, appearing in a press sheet from the American Forestry association, with the headlines to the effect that Colonel Greeley challenged a "plan to get control over Alaska's forests."

"Not content with such ridiculous and plainly vicious efforts," Secretary Fall wrote, "propaganda has been continued."

The entire conflict, he said today, in explanation of his letter, was brought about through his approval of bills now before congress authorizing the president to co-ordinate the duties of the different bureaus which now have jurisdiction over the property and activities of the general government in Alaska, and under one bill transferring them to the interior department.

"Among these activities," Secretary Fall said in his letter to the house committee chairman, "was the administration of the forests in Alaska to the end that the work of the interior department might be co-ordinated by the transfer of the forests to the interior, the administration of the mining laws, the agricultural entry laws, the construction of roads and other methods of transportation."

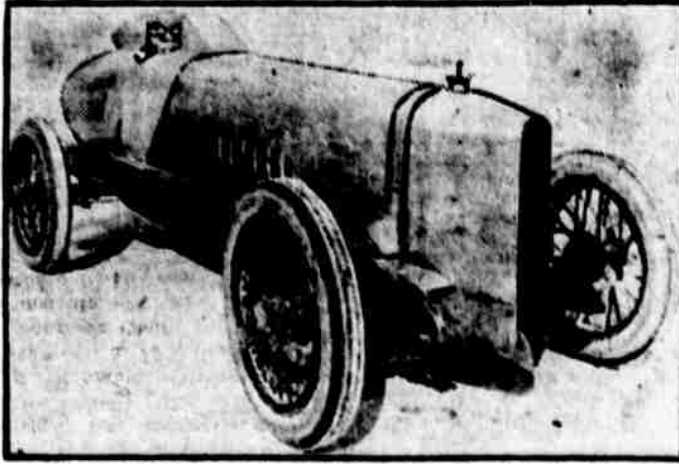

"This at once brought down upon my devoted head," he said, "the wrath of Mr. Gifford Pinchot and his followers."

Fall dealt at length with what he said were published attacks upon him by Pinchot and others concerning his Alaska policy, and said: "I understand perfectly well that my idea, as to the development of natural resources and making them accessible to our returned soldiers and other citizens do not meet with the approval of certain narrow-minded and biased bureaucratic governmental officials and their sponsors."

He asserted that his department had no controversy with the agricultural department nor with Secretary Wallace.

"I have only talked of the activities of the forest service with Secretary Wallace in a casual way," he said.

80 Pounds of Valuable Ambergris Gift of Sea

HONOLULU, Feb. 15.—(By mail)—A gift of the sea, 80 pounds of a substance believed to be ambergris—came recently to Harry Flinn, keeper of a lighthouse at a lonely spot called Kalae point, on the most southerly tip of the island of Hawaii, and has been sent to New York for chemical analysis in the hope that it may be the sperm whale concretion which is valued at $28 an ounce.

Flinn said that shortly after he discovered the mass on the rocks below his lighthouse, a dead whale was thrown up on the shore, and some substance similar to that which he discovered was found in the mammal.
