DAIRYING

FINANCE alone cannot develop the dairy industry in Klamath county, an industry that this region is eminently fitted for, and which would solve to a large extent the problems of economical transportation and marketing.

The banks of this community have shown an understanding of the importance of dairying development in their support so far, and doubtless, as financial conditions improve, will continue and enlarge their helpful policy.

But, while we would not go so far as to say that dairymen must be born, there is a lot of making over that must take place in the methods of the average individual who "keeps cows" to make of him a real dairyman.

Farmer Smith, in his addresses here, touched upon some of the needs: elimination of haphazard methods and determination by scientific tests of the productiveness of the herd and the quality of the product; weeding out of all unprofitable cows and of all scrub sires; absolute cleanliness, which not only adds to the price of the product but is as essential, for the protection of the public health, in the dairy as it is in the hospital operating room.

With the possibilities that Klamath has as a dairying region, there is no likelihood that its wonderful potentialities in this direction will long be overlooked. Already eastern dairymen, with operations hampered by long and rigorous winters, have their eyes upon this territory, and with very little publicity dairymen from many less favored places will be attracted to this land, where cheaper acreage, ample forage, altitude and climatic conditions, combine to make the results of their industry and skill more profitable.

Farmers of Klamath county have an opportunity to create a foundation for a great future for dairying through application of modern methods, furnishing an object lesson that outside investors cannot fail to see and heed.

Klamath butter, we are told, now sells readily, and at a premium over the average makes, in outside markets. And yet the highest level of scientific production and handling the raw milk has not been approached here.

On account of our location and cheap alfalfa land in ever growing abundance, as the Klamath irrigation project expands, we have the opportunity to establish here an industry that will create profitable use for the land, being in hundreds of families build creameries and condensing plants, and enormously to our payrolls and our general prosperity.

There is no guesswork about it. California communities, with less natural advantages, have built from as small beginnings in a few years.

For instance, the territory contained in Stanislaus, Merced and San Joaquin counties supplies more than half the milk consumed in the San Francisco bay region, and has a surplus for butter making and evaporating that keeps scores of factories operating the year round, including such plants as the Horden condensing plant near Modesto, employing a couple of hundred workers. Most of this great development has come about in the past two decades.

But this condition was not created by money alone. Dairying is a business enterprise that has the same complexity of problems as has any other. It requires skill and knowledge to overcome the problems. But skill comes with practice and knowledge with studious application.

First comes the realization of the benefits to be derived from a given course of conduct; then the desire for participation in the benefits;

then search after methods of attaining the benefits—and then the benefits come naturally. There is a general realization of the benefits that dairying will bring to Klamath county and in a large degree a desire for the benefits. We are now down to the ways and means stage, and it will not be long before dairying here will be expanding by leaps and bounds, and taking rank as a leading industry.

School was dismissed so that the children might attend and the first half hour of his talk was given to them. He told of his life and conditions of his boyhood days. He told of joining the army in the Civil war at 17. At the close of the war he went to Minnesota, then a new country and the conditions of the farmers there led him to resolve to devote his life largely to the betterment of the lives of the farmers. He tried to impress on his audience the fact that their success or failure in life depended largely upon their own efforts. He told many humorous stories illustrating the folly of blaming one's failure to bad luck, taxes, tariff etc.

The Merrill people appreciate the privilege of being able to hear Smith and wish it might have been advertised more extensively as some were not aware of his being in Merrill. Mrs. Schuch, the librarian is confined to her home with a cold.

URGES RATIFICATION OF GOVERNMENT CONTRACT

Editor Herald:

The opportune time of years to Bonanza section is at hand. The people of Bonanza and Horseshoe district by voting favorably on the government contract, March 22, thereby helping Langell Valley to obtain water from Clear lake, are helping themselves. They are committing the Reclamation service to expend at least $600,000 cash, the impounding of Horseshoe water, assuring water for practically 25,000 acres of land. What does this mean to the town of Bonanza?

Eight years ago Bonanza had an up-to-date flour mill and creamery and more population than today. Why did they fail? Lack of patronage, as the people were unable to raise enough, under dry land farming to support them. What is their condition today? Producing an excess of grain and milk products over their needs, which have to be freighted out, but still not enough to support local creamery or flour mills or to induce the railroad to complete a spur into Bonanza. Vote to accept the contract, which Langell Valley will do, get the water on the lands and what will be the result. At least six times the amount of irrigated land, the products of which will naturally center in Bonanza, assuring support for creamery, flour mill, grain elevator, and additional in and out going tonnage, which means the completion of the railroad spur into Bonanza, not by subscription of local money but by railroad capital itself. If we can show them enough tonnage to warrant it, rest assured it will come.

In former years we have seen thousands of sheep and cattle driven through our country to the irrigated lands beyond. Why not prepare to feed these flocks and herds ourselves? Let us remember that to successfully compete with others, we must play the game as played by the successful. Also that we are American and the last four letters of that word "I can", should be our accepted motto.

This question is even more vital to us than the road bond issue which our section of the county put over so splendidly.

Yours truly, H. J. TICKNOR.
