HOPEFUL SIGN

NOT as an attempt to enforce Sunday observance, but in recognition of and conformance to long established custom, the new postmaster general of the United States, Hubert Work, urges upon all members of the postal service the keeping of the Sabbath holy.

It is a hopeful sign when a high cabinet officer sees the need of beating back along the path of old traditions, to the God-fearing and God-loving ways of our fathers.

The postmaster-general's action need alarm no one. He does not seek to stop the wheels of necessary business, nor influence any one in their choice of how the day will be spent.

The order speaks in the terms that would naturally be chosen by a practical business man, who is a Christian gentleman. It reflects credit upon the high official position of him who issued it, and it speaks well for the administration that chooses to surround itself with men of such high principle as the order indicates.

As the law stands, by act of 1912, post-offices of the first and second class, the small offices, do not open on Sunday for general delivery and only special delivery mail may be handled. Offices of the third and fourth class are not regulated by this law but by departmental rulings.

The new order of the postmaster general is designed to encourage Sunday closing of third and fourth class offices as far as practical. It is not intended to supersede the existing statute but to permit a liberal interpretation in regard to Sunday observance, "when the public convenience and the necessities of the community will not be interfered with seriously."

The reasons for his action are set forth by the postmaster general as follows:

Where it has been the custom at the smaller offices to open the postoffice on Sundays and postmasters feel that such custom may properly be abandoned, due notice should be given to the patrons of the postmaster's intentions. Likewise, where postmasters feel that some Sunday service is a public necessity, it should be reduced to a minimum and proper advertisement given.

As the business of the country is now organized it would be impossible to avoid all gainful employment on the Sabbath.

Religious people cherish the idea for spiritual reasons, believing the example of the Creator, who "rested on the seventh day," commands our observance of it as a day of rest.

Physiologists and students of human efficiency agree that one day in seven devoted to rest and recreation of energy is essential to physical economy.

In view of the attitude of a religious people, supported as it is by tradition and good usage, together with our belief that there is more to this life than its duration, the postmaster general would urge postal employees to encourage the sentiment, found in all communities, for Sabbath observance.

NOT POLITICAL

ALL over the country the new administration is making new appointments, and especially do the changes affect the postal service. There are people who look upon the postoffice as a fat political plum that falls inevitably into the hands of the applicant with the greatest party influence. As a matter of fact, it is hedged around with civil service precautions, and even the slightest mention by a candidate of his political preferences, would result in his immediate elimination.

Under present rulings persons desirous of taking the postmaster's examination send in their applications to the civil service commission, answering the questions therein under oath, and giving five names as references. To these references, and others secured from Bradstreet's are sent confidential inquiries and questions concerning all the applicants for the position, with special instructions to avoid all allusion to politics, religion or membership in fraternal orders.

From the information thus obtained the civil service commission judges of the fitness of applicants. They give absolutely no consideration to any letters or petitions whatsoever.

The civil service commission then certifies to the eligibles, and it is the custom for the congressman or senator from the district to be given right to choose among the three highest, if three are certified.

In this way, it can readily be seen, the people are given an opportunity to express their choice, and, while politics may perhaps have some choice in the final result, the civil service commission is entirely outside of political influence.

In the case of Klamath Falls there were but two on the eligible list. They are both at the present time in civil service, and the one who stood the highest will be Klamath Falls' next postmaster.

ROAD PROGRAM HUGE

Forest Service Expenditure Will Total $281,000 for 434 Miles

PORTLAND, April 5.—Five hundred miles of forest road at a cost of $281,000, 434 miles of trail costing $64,000 and four bridges costing $2600, will be built by the United States forest service in Oregon this year, in addition to the funds for trail and road maintenance, $26,000 for 5089 miles of trail and $36,000 for 2089 miles of road, according to F. H. Brundage, district forest inspector in charge of road and trail projects. The total allotment for the 15 forests in the state is $415,000, with $65,000 available from co-operative funds from counties and other agencies.

Among the principal projects in Oregon are the Willamette road on the Cascade forest, from Oakridge to Summit, at $27,000; the Salt Creek road, leading into McCredie Hot Springs 2 1/2 miles, at $6000. On the Crater national forest, $15,000 will be spent on the road between Tiller and Trail, $7,000 in the vicinity of Lake of the Woods, and $3000 on the road to Diamond lake. On the Deschutes forest, additional work will be placed on the road from Bend to Sparks and Elk lake, and a new road will be built from Lava lake to Davis lake at a cost of $18,000.

"These roads are primarily intended to open up the forest areas and make them accessible for fire protection," said Brundage. "They will be of sufficient type of construction so the public can use them, but will not compare in any way with the more important county or city roads. They will be narrow, only 9 feet wide on side cuts and 12 feet wide on turn-pike sections.

"Construction will be handled by supervisors and rangers on each individual forest, experience having shown that this work can be carried on as a part of the fire protection program. Crews employed will be available for fire suppression when needed. This will aid in extending more adequate protection to the valuable timber resources of the national forests."

"THE FIGHTER" AT STRAND; MOST SPECTACULAR PICTURE

The big railroad wreck scene which is a feature of Conway Tearle's new Seisnick picture, "The Fighter," is said to be one of the most sensational dramatic incidents ever incorporated in a motion picture. The wreck shows the star rushing over the rails at eighty miles an hour in a lone steam engine when suddenly the engine plunges through a burning trestle to the river hundreds of feet below. It is a scene possessing all the dramatic punch and thrill of the old-time melodrama, and yet the picture has none of the cheapness peculiar to the average melodramatic play.

"The Fighter" was made from Albert Payson Terhune's popular story of the same name and is said to provide the star with an ideal role. Henry Kolker directed the picture and Wilfred Westover plays the leading feminine role. The cast also included Arthur Houseman, Ernest Lawford, George Stewart, Warren Cook and Helen Lindroth.

"The Fighter" will be seen at the Strand theatre tonight.

Also two good comedies and country store tonight. 15 prizes given away at 8:30.
