WILL IT HELP?

THE first thing that strikes one in glancing over the findings of the state reconciliation board in the local controversy between lumber operators and their employees is its unequivocal support of the basic eight hour day.

Foundation for settlement, says the board, must be found, if at all, solely in mutual concessions in the matter of wages.

The question now confronting the community is—Will the parties to the dispute seek settlement?

The attitude of the wage-earners throughout has indicated that they are willing to make wage concessions. This attitude was expressed by Labor's witnesses before the board meeting, and the board has accepted the view that there is an "entire willingness" on the part of labor to make wage adjustments.

The next move, if there is to be a next move, therefore is obviously up to the operators.

There can be no question that the public interest, the interest of individuals and business concerns not parties to the strike, is suffering seriously from the industrial stagnation that the strike has brought about.

It is not only our individual opinion, but it is an opinion that has been expressed by all observers familiar with conditions that a controversy of this nature causes in a community, that the public group, as a whole, have maintained a fine impartial attitude in the dispute.

The public has patiently borne its share of inconvenience so far, and we believe has established its right to consideration by the parties to the controversy.

Now that the reconciliation board has spoken, and in language that has no uncertain meaning, it is time for a general showdown.

We have not sought to intrude our views of this matter; and we do not seek to make ourselves obtrusive now.

But back of the reconciliation board's findings, and we would submit worthy of the most careful consideration, there is power; not power to enforce arbitrarily their judgment, but power that will operate with great force through the medium of public opinion.

While their authority is limited, they hold office by the will of the state, and back of them stands, to a certain degree, the authority of the state. Their words must carry weight.

In the true appraisal of that weight by the parties to the dispute lies the solution of our present problem; in a false appraisal lies grave danger that the condition may be made worse instead of better.

We would suggest to Labor that they analyze the weight of the board's opinion fully, before they acclaim its decision as a victory, even though their contentions in the matter of a basic day, and a minimum living wage are absolutely upheld.

Let Labor consider, in the same spirit of good feeling so far shown, how best the decision may apply to local conditions as a practical remedy that will set in motion again the wheels of a paralyzed industry.

To the employers we recommend similar cold, critical analysis. It is essential that they gauge rightly and beyond question the power of the document.

They must consider its effect upon their fellow-operators throughout the state; those plants that are now on an eight-hour basis. Will these be likely, especially the smaller plants, to insure any general tie-up of the industry, by joining a general movement for the abolition of the eight-hour day?

In other words, if we fight here, does it not appear that we will fight alone?

It is possible that the tall, if it wags long enough, may move the dog, but will the tall survive the effort?

Now, it seems to us, is a time for cool consideration by the best intelligence of this community of whether our course will take us. This dispute could, we believe, have been avoided had a little more foresight been shown on both sides.

But we are again at the forks of the trail, and one course is inevitably going to lead to greater and more general suffering.

Will we all profit by the lessons of the rash past and let experience be the guide to a wiser future?

There is still time to retrieve our losses; time still for a prosperous season in the lumbering industry if the men upon whom the settlement of this situation devolves will meet sacrifice for sacrifice in the interests of the welfare of all.

It is the right of the neutral element of this community to insist that some effort be made by both parties to this controversy to reach a settlement; that on the one side no undue and uncalled-for triumph be allowed to jeopardize the community's rights, and that on the other side this document of the reconciliation board be not hastily and without consideration cast aside as immaterial and of no effect.

In the interests of the whole population of the area adversely affected The Herald requests that the controversial parties attempt amicable settlement; and urges that they seek peace-makers among the influential citizens of the community, who are non-factional, so that some solution may be reached.

TRADE AT HOME

(The Oregon Farmer)

THE doctor who answers a hurry call with the greatest possible speed is more valuable than a physician of equal skill who drives up to the patient's door at his own convenience.

Service counts. It is worth money. Who is there who doesn't agree with this general principle?

And doesn't it apply also in the buying of merchandise?

The progressive merchant in your own trading center gives service along with the goods. He has a selection of merchandise continually in stock. You don't have to wait. When you enter the store you are able to see the article itself in which you are interested.

You see it with your eyes, feel it with your fingers, note its actual size, shape and color; compare it with other goods at different prices, and, if it is what you want, take it away with you.

If you have questions to ask, you are given an explanation on the spot. The answer given your first question may suggest another query. It is answered within half a minute of the first interrogation. No time is lost.

You benefit from the dealer's practical knowledge, from the fact that he is on the ground and ready at all times to see to it personally that the article he has sold you gives satisfaction.

The wise buyer will not forget that such matters have a dollars and cents value and should enter into the reckoning whenever a price comparison is being made.

EUGENE O'BRIEN PLAYS
LEAD IN "HIS WIFE'S MONEY"

"His Wife's Money", the new Seznick Picture, starring Eugene O'Brien which comes to The Strand theatre tonight is properly described as a comedy drama. Its story is such as to permit of the painting of real life with plenty of light and shade, and as a consequence there is both wholesome comedy and gripping drama.

The picture public is always interested in the "big things" which producers of the screen find it possible to use in telling their stories. An early incident of "His Wife's Money" shows a disabled motor boat with a beautiful girl its lone occupant, snatched from sure destruction as it hangs on the very brink of a precipitous waterfall. Deep in the bowels of the earth, later in the action, there is shown a terrific explosion which successfully uncovers a rich vein of ore which means a fortune for the hero. Still later is shown the money-mad stock exchange in New York in the throes of a "bear" movement that means ruin and disaster for hundreds of frenzied operators.

With Eugene O'Brien playing a role for which he is ideally suited, Zena Keefe as his principal support, and surrounded by a cast of players who are among the ablest ever assembled for a Seznick Picture, it is not strange that the wealth of action which is indicated by these big scenes makes for drama of the kind that is rarely encountered in the picture theatre.

Also country store tonight. Fifteen prizes. Some of the prizes given away at 9 o'clock: 25 lb. sack flour, lb. coffee, package tea, 2 boxes candy, large box crackers, large can fruit, bag sugar and others. Price 10 cents and 20 cents.

HISTORY GIVEN OF COUNTY UNIT PLAN OF PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Workings of Plan Since First Adoption Outlined; New System Held Best

In order to give a clear understanding of the proposed county unit plan for schools by outlining the history of the plan since its first adoption, the following statement today was issued by Twyla Ferguson, county school superintendent:

"The question of the county unit plan for schools is to be voted on at the primaries May 19 in Klamath county. An explanation of the plan as it will operate in this county has appeared elsewhere in print, but it is interesting to note the history of this plan of the county for the unit in the administration and taxation for schools.

"In the early history of the colonies there could be little communication, little exchange of commodities and ideas. Every settlement was almost an independent republic and its law-making body was the town meeting. Under these pioneer conditions the district school sprang up, serving the people of those times as no other system could. Gradually the trails became roads, the Indians were subdued and civilization spread.

"It became apparent to those old patriots who were fired with a zeal for a democratic school system that all children were not getting equal educational opportunities. This became even more apparent after railroads were built and other corporations came in to develop the country. The children who happened to live away from the railroad often had the most meager advantages.

while those near the railroad or other corporation property received the benefits of the increased valuation. Under the district system such inequalities in educational opportunities were inevitable. Therefore the states that first adopted the district were the first to abandon it when it had outgrown its usefulness.

"Some of the Atlantic coast states adopted the township as the unit. This was the natural unit, as the township organization of government in the eastern states is much more prominent than the county. The state of Maryland, however, organized its schools with the county as the unit when the state was created, and has followed that plan ever since.

"Ten states have the pure county unit system: Utah, New Mexico, Louisiana, Alabama, Georgia, Tennessee, Kentucky, Maryland and Florida. A year ago 16 states in the Union were left under the district system. In many states the county unit plan was first introduced and proved its success, the legislature passed a law making every county adopt the system. In no case has a county ever gone back to the district system.

"A letter from the department of public instruction of Montana, where the adoption of the plan was made optional with each county, reads as follows:

"The administration has been efficient and economical. The special levy in the rural school district in Cascade county is much lower than the average levy for the old type of district system. Since its adoption, every child in the rural schools of this county has been furnished with nine months of school each year. The purpose of the law was to equalize the tax burden and to furnish every child in the county an opportunity to go to school nine months of the year. This purpose has been realized."
