ings will make the showing so necessary to interest large capital.

"Rebuilding right at the city limits of Klamath Falls, and extending all the way through to Bend, we have a wonderful traffic-producing territory, rich in timber, agriculture, and stock-raising, which is already responding to our construction and in time will pour such a volume of business into this city as few dream of."

"Let us pull together and put forth every effort for this development and, as Monte Cristo said, 'The world is ours.'"

"As to the unmerging of the Central Pacific and Southern Pacific, as I recall, the case has been in the courts about 10 years. It is not going to be settled overnight by resolutions of commercial bodies or by territorial arrangements and petitions to the interstate commerce commission. The question is so big and so serious that it will only be settled after many months of serious presentation by the highest railway officials and their attorneys on both sides, and equally serious and prolonged consideration by the interstate commerce commission. Possibly it will be preceded by a reopening of the case and a long, hard fight in the courts."

"But the chances are that this will precipitate the re-grouping of the western lines as authorized by the North-Columbia act, under which the Union Pacific is just as liable to turn up owner of the Western Pacific and the Central Pacific as retained by the Southern Pacific."

"Granting the question may be settled by the commission remember all the time that it is a constructive and not a destructive force bent upon mutilation, as is widely suggested. Therefore, when settled, it will be for the best interests of all concerned, as nearly as possible, but especially in the interests of the public with due regard for vested rights."

"Now it is plain that this can only be in the spirit of compromise. There will be all sort of fusing of lines and deals and common user privileges of portions of the mileage involved. The supreme court plainly indicated that the Southern Pacific should be accorded rights through to Portland and to the San Francisco terminal. When the smoke clears away it will be found possessing these rights and others which will in many important details practically preserve its integrity and enable it to function as before generally."

"As to its effect on railroad construction in Oregon, I wouldn't waste time building air castles of this kind. No responsible executive of the Union Pacific has indicated that a mile of new road would be built in the event of its purchase of the Central Pacific and there will be little if any reason for it then there has been heretofore. It is easy for Union Pacific officials to speculate on what might be done if serves to array public opinion on their side of the case and it fills the newspapers with just the kind of stuff the public wants. We have had a dearth of railroad building on paper for some time."

"But when Lovett and Gray on one side and Kruttschnitt and Spruile on the other and their able lawyers gather around the table they will find other solutions of the problem than spending twenty or thirty million on elaborate railway construction which they have all along voted down."

"What we are chiefly interested in here, and what I have been striving for all these years to create and maintain, is an adequate competitive railroad conditions. Everybody knows, or should know by this time, where our interests lie; also, that more than ever before we need to get in and paddle our own railroad canoe. Otherwise, in my opinion, it will be many years before there is any change to affect us severely one way or the other."
