ADAM ELM

DAM Elm, humble worker in A Portland restaurant, so loved the woods that he built a quarter mile of trail in Macleay park, including minature culverts, bridges and buttresses a masterpiece of engineering. Adam Elm built this trail unasked, without compensation, without though of reward; built it during the ome he was off shift at the restaurant.

"I do this for pleasurework, I know, But I am always in the open and to me it is an outdoor sport. also, I do it because I love

Perhaps Adam Elm does not know, but he also bufit the trail because he is a good citizen. Men of his stamp are of more value to a community even than a park such as he sought to beautify, and are more

Here's to Adam Elms everywhere!

SUCCESS

(Contributed) S UCCESS is a word not easily demost wholly upon the point of view. To one, success may mean the acquisition of money and property; while to another, success is exempiffied in some great achievement, such as it construction of a dam in the race of great engineering difficulties. Again, there are those who see success in a happy, well or dered life, moderately spiced by the good things represented by wealth Too many men have awakened in the winter of their lives to find the years devoted to the acquisition of wealth, which to them spelled suchas been a lifetime wasted; that something for which they have they thought was money-wealth, has slipped beyond the grasp and left them empty handed. On the other hand, the man who has achieved some outstanding work winning the admiration of his fellow-men, may realize that he, too, has in his zeal for concrete results overlooked some understands would have rounded out his life and spelled real success.

To the one who learns to live sch day so as to demand the respect, confidence and love of his fellow-men; who strives to give his best the world, without demanding more than his due; who cultivates an understanding of people, rather than the worship of money; to this man, according to my mind, success is certain. In his life will be combined all thre elements achievement, happiness, moderate wealththe other various, sometimes elusive factors which go to make life worth while. Such a manner of living is to me the truest success.

UN-AMERICANISM

THE efforts to deprive a man of his rights as a citizen because of sub-consciously longed, and which his religion is dangerous, foolish, and un-American. Heaven knows, we have little enough religion in the S country without penalizing by practical disfranchisement and actual disability the man who is fortunate enough to have some of any sort. Whatever menace there may be to try from the practice of any religion is small, indeed, compared to that that it apparent in the effort to overthrow the constitution in the name of another religion.

Is the foundation of this country. no religion had a monopoly of the this year Are we becoming so strong and new records for th distances. reckless and intelerant that we are scendants of the founders of nation—that they must cease practice of their religious beliefs. Wenderlich, all well-known. and adopt ours, or profess none at subject peoples?

What sort of religion is practiced and professed by these fellow citizens of ours who deny the rest of us the right to practice such religion as we may have the happiness to profess? Is there in it any spirit of brotherly leve of charity, of good will to men? Does it enjoin its followers to love their neighbors and comfort the downtrodden? Does it measure up to the Gollden Rule, of doing unto others what we would the others should do unto us?

Fair-minded citizens of all classes and creeds resent the injection of theological fanaticism into politics. The religious liberty they wish to enjoy for themselves, they are willing that their neighbors shall enjoy. Heretofore, they have been a united community, working for the best interests of the city and state. They are eager to see continued that commusity spirit, with which we can accomplish anything for the general good, and forgetting which we can get nowhere but to the devil.
