A REAL JUDGE

PROTECTION of the rights of the citizen is of more importance than the conviction of a few individuals for bootlegging, declares Federal Judge Bean of Portland.

There are persons, who seem to feel that the whole end and aim of the judicial machinery of the United States is the crushing of the illicit liquor traders, who will disagree, doubtless, but far-sighted and sober citizens will applaud the firm stand of the Portland jurist.

In the particular case that brought down judicial disapproval, federal agents arrested a bootlegger, then secured a warrant to search a house at a certain number on a certain street. Arriving in the designated street, they found that the number did not exist, but that the accused bootlegger lived at an entirely different address on another street.

Whereupon the agents returned to the United States commissioner and asked him to change the street address on the original warrant. Which he nonchalantly and obligingly did with a few strokes of the pen and attested the substitution by his initials.

No new affidavit was issued, no new process was drawn. One address was scratched out and another written in by an official sworn to uphold the constitution of the United States at the behest of other agents of the government charged with the faithful administration of its laws.

Evidently none of the federal servants had heard of the fourth amendment: for certainly no good citizen would so contemptuously disregard the constitution, the supreme law of the land.

And the fourth amendment to the constitution specifies plainly that a search of a citizen's home may be conducted only after a formal warrant has been issued, supported by sworn testimony, setting forth probable cause, stating the reason for the search, the crime charged, the exact location of the premises to be searched and the illicit matter expected to be found.

And yet things had come to such a pass in Portland, that a warrant issued for entrance into a home in one part of the city by a scratch of a pen was to be made to cover search of a home in an entirely different location.

"There is no right the preservation of which is more vital to liberty than that guaranteed to the citizen in the fourth amendment, to be free from search save upon warrant," says the St. Louis Post Dispatch in a recent editorial, "yet there is none in more precarious condition among us today."

And verily it is the truth. Heaven send us more judges like Robert Bean to champion our dearest and blood-bought rights.

SIGNS OF PROGRESS

A Kansas law states that when two trains meet at a crossing each is to stop, whistle, and wait until the other gets by.—Maumtaton, Ohio, Mercury.

"NOW IS THE ACCEPTED TIME"

PEACE has its generals no less than war. The military leader gets the greatest acclaim who causes the greatest waste and destruction. Measured by this standard the palm for staying progress and wasting lives goes in times of peace to General Apathy.

With wonderful opportunity to realize their full ambitions, Klamath county now appears to us to be checkmated and bottled up by the hosts of this doughty general.

We firmly believe that a concerted effort now to spread the attractiveness of Klamath's resources broadcast over the country would double the population of the county by 1925.

We firmly believe that a publicity fund of ten thousand dollars, wisely administered and with the energetic backing of every resident of the county, would attract a thousand settlers within a year and return the investment tenfold within that period.

We could fill a column with detailed reasons for the faith that is in us, but we are going to use the column to better advantage. We are going to reprint an editorial from the Southern Oregon News of Marshfield, with every word of which we agree, except the confining of the co-operation and benefits to western Klamath county, or the western slope of the Cascade mountains. If any Klamath resident is interested it should be the resident of the eastern part of the county, where new cheap land, just coming under irrigation, offers colonists one of the finest opportunities for building securely for the future of any spot in the west.

This editorial is not to be taken lightly. It offers the biggest program of a lifetime, and the logical time is here to grasp the opportunity.

Consider Los Angeles of twenty years ago, and Los Angeles of today. Ponder on the growth of Spokane and Seattle in the last two decades.

Then if the destiny at our doors is not obvious, we might as well strike camp and retreat, leaving General Apathy in full control. If we fail to cope with this general now, when all the advantages are with us, when can we hope to overcome his power?

But to get back to the News editorial and the possibilities of co-operation it opens up—here it is:

Northern California is at present engaged in a mammoth publicity program, destined to weld together all of the scattered interests and struggling aims of that large section of the commonwealth of California that lies to the north of San Francisco bay.

A fund of approximately $400,000 is to be devoted to an educational publicity campaign, aimed to spread the gospel of a united Northern California to the four corners of the United States and by advertising Northern California, likewise shed some reflected light on the rest of the state.

The program is a splendid one and it is encouraging to note that practically every newspaper in the northern section of the state, including San Francisco has joined in the movement editorially.

The significant fact in the campaign is that the metropolitan dailies of San Francisco have hit upon the one solution of the problem of state development,—the development of the state's outlying communities.

Why not apply the same formula to Oregon? It cannot be denied that the influx of 50,000 settlers to the territory south of the Shuswap river and west of the Cascade mountains would give a decided impetus to the commercial activity of the entire state.

A concerted movement, sponsored by the civic and commercial organizations of Lane, Douglas, Coos, Curry, Josephine, Jackson and Western Klamath counties, to advertise the resources of the territory included within those counties would unquestionably bring profitable results on the investment. Southern California, without the diversity of resources with nothing except a practically constant thermometer and oceans of enthusiasm and vision, captured the tourists and dying-citizens of the entire nation.

Not satisfied with inviting the world to come to California to die, the ambitious citizenry has more recently set out to capture large manufacturing industries and thus make their section of the state a profitable place in which to live.

The total population of Lane, Douglas, Coos, Curry, Josephine, Jackson and Western Klamath counties, according to the 1920 census was 118,840.

In 1900 Los Angeles reported a population of 102,479 and in 1920 this had grown to 516,673.

We have the same opportunity with a larger field in which to work. Let us build together a Southwestern Oregon that in twenty years shall have a population of more than 400,000 persons, made up of a large proportion of agriculturists and orchardists, miners and dairymen, manufacturers and ordinary, calloused, hardworking laborers.

We can do it by a combination of proper advertising, the extending of legitimate inducements to prospective capital, the sacrifice of a few small community desires for the sake of the greater whole and the development of friendly business and social relations with our neighboring counties.

Why not work for the advancement of a Southwestern Oregon development project, in which all counties, all commercial organizations and all newspapers will unite?

WHAT HE WOULD GET

"If a farmer has four thousand bushels of wheat," said the teacher, "and sells them at 60c a bushel, what would he get?"
To which a pupil enthusiastically replied: "An automobile."
