

POWER PLANT, WEED

New Equipment Being Installed by Lumber Company

WEED, Aug. 10.—Work has been commenced at Weed on the construction of a new power house, near the sawmill. Forms are already being set up for the huge sawdust bins.

When the new plant is completed, the present power house, near the factory, will be torn down. All sawdust and waste from the factory and planing mill, now burned in the the factory power house, will be used in the new power house.

Blow pipes will be erected from the factory and planing mill, some of which will be about one-half mile in length. Pressure on the factory end and a vacuum on the power house end will be used. At present the company buys much power from the California-Oregon Power company. After the new power house is completed it will generate all its own power. This will mean a saving of several thousand dollars a month. The new power house will be completed in about eight months.

Autographic Brownies

The Brownies that fold—we stock them

These cameras are Eastman-made with Brownie simplicity in Kodak factories by Kodak workmen. There is no secret about their popularity.

Take the 3A, shown above, for example. It folds like a Kodak and has the exclusively-Eastman, autographic feature. The lens and shutter are carefully tested. Pictures are post card size—3 1/4 x 5 1/2 inches. And yet its price card reads "$14.50."

Ask to see the Autographic Brownies at our photographic department—it will prove worth your while.

LITTLE RED SCHOOLHOUSE TARGET

Quaint Institution of American Rural Life Is Declared Danger to National Progress

NEW YORK, Aug. 10.—Add to the list of idols smashed to smithereens by the efficiency of modern science that quaint institution of American rural life—the "little red schoolhouse"—now denounced by educational experts of Columbia University as "a danger to national progress."

Experiments conducted for the past year in a tiny school in Warren county, N. J., have proved to Dr. Fannie Dunn, of Teachers' college, Columbia, that the problems attending the evils of the "cult of the little red schoolhouse," as Dr. Dunn calls it, can be solved by the same methods that have brought progress in teaching the young of the cities

"how to shoot." Forty-four pupils attended the typical schoolhouse in Warren county, which was seven miles from a trunk line railroad, two miles from a postoffice, and out in the open country. A single teacher was forced to instruct eight grades. There are still 200,000 similar schools in the United States, just 160,000 too many, Columbia educators say. They hope to cut the number to 40,000. Changes that seem appallingly revolutionary to Americans who remember the rigid, plaster-cast demeanor that was exacted of every country schoolboy who was forced to attend the little red schoolhouse of years ago, are recommended for those one-teacher institutions that will remain. Unrestricted movement about the room, the installation of pupil helpers for the teacher, a more "clubby" spirit among the youngsters, and the application of the "automat" idea in teaching the children to gain a large part of the education themselves from the school library, are part of the new plan evolved from the Warren county tests.

Despite Whittier's legend of the famous schoolboy of the "I'll red building," whose "cheeks of tan" betokened splendid health, Professor Thomas W. Wood of the Eye Sight Conservation Council of America, who is interested in the experiments, says that 85 percent of the pupils in rural schools in New York state have health defects, as opposed to 72 percent of unhealthy city children. In the whole United States, Dr. Wood says, 15,000,000 of the 24,000,000 school children have bodily defects.

So depressing are the faults of country schools, the experts say, that much of the congestion of the cities results from the inability of the schools to make country life attractive. Efforts are now being made through meetings at Columbia of such educators as Miss Charl C. Williams, recent president of the National education association; Mrs. Katherine Cook, of the Federal bureau of education, and Dr. Kenyon L. Butterfield, president of Massachusetts agricultural college, to bring about the changes in rural education that will end the plaint of the modern schoolboy: "I'm getting Oh so sick. Of reading and arithmetic—That's why, we gave the teacher the sack. And, we're never gonna come back. If she doesn't like it she can sit on a tack. We've got the schoolhouse blues."

THE WRONG STREET
Edith—"Dickey, dear, your 'of-fice' is in State street, isn't it?"
Dickey—"Yes, why?"
Edith—"That's what I told papa. He made such a funny mistake about you yesterday. He said he'd been looking you up in Bradstreet."
