Two Colors in Fall Blouses

Two colors are found in most fall blouses and brown and green seems the favorite combination. Materials are combined, too—crepe de chine and duvetyn, for example.

PARIS—Unless your figure is of the best it is time to begin a song of sorrow or a hymn of hate. The tight-fitting tailor-made suit with a clearly defined waist line is on the way back. The coat will be long. Almost knee length. It will fit so snugly that the normal waistline will be accentuated. All the loose, indefinite, long-waisted effects are doomed so far as tailored suits are concerned, unless, and this is quite possible, women who like the long, loose effects simply refuse to be thrust into snugly fitted clothes.

LONDON—Bare hands and arms are no longer seen at the smartest evening affairs. The best dressed women have gone back to the custom of wearing long white gloves at dances. These gloves reach at least to the elbow and frequently higher. After all, bare hands and arms have been "in" for a good while and a return to evening gloves is not unexpected. Many women consider gloves a tremendous advantage, particularly in an overheated ballroom.

LONDON—Every rainy summer day brings the uneven skirt nearer to its final banishment. Interesting though these dangling panels and ribbons and laces may be in a trim garden or a drawing room, they become obvious obstacles for street wear. English women insist on the skirt that is not only short but also even.

NEW YORK—Black and gray are the smart shades for autumn footwear. Usually the two shades are combined, a black patent leather low shoe having a gray back and one gray strap over the instep. Dainty perforated patterns are features of these shoes which have a gray pearl button and the low, military heel. Another type is chiefly of patent leather with a skin top in smoke gray suede and two narrow gray suede straps.
