

DRUG SMUGGLING BECOMES ART

Long Years of Experience Brings Perfection to India And Burma Dealers

RANGOON, Burma, Sept. 22.—The drug smugglers of India and Burma, through long years of experience, have developed a finished system of operations which has little resemblance to the more or less crude and hit or miss methods of run runners in the United States.

The men who finance the smuggling of drugs, says R. K. Anderson, superintendent of the Burmese Excise department, are to all appearances respectable, well-to-do merchants, with flourishing businesses in piece goods, rice or timber which hide their real occupations as traffickers in opium, cocaine, morphine and hemp drugs. These men do not handle the drugs, but leave the details to hosts of underlings. If an underling is arrested, fined, and sent to jail, his principal pays his fine, gives him his salary, and supports his family while he is in prison.

"That a certain man is a smuggler is well known to the authorities," reports Anderson. "In fact the suspect will cheerfully admit it. He knows that he cannot be touched unless the contraband is found in his possession."

The chief source of protection to smugglers is the accessibility to bribery of those who are charged with the duty of preventing smuggling. They can make more money by failing to suppress smuggling than by suppressing it.

A stately bearing in a woman beyond middle life makes one turn in admiration! That proudly held head—that stateliness are due, you know, to an unslackening pride in her appearance. Just because she is along in years is no reason in her mind for letting her figure become settled and dowdy. Instead she is more concerned over the choice and fitting of her corsets than ever.

So she can be proud of herself and we can be proud of her! Many elderly women choose a Modart because they derive so much comfort from them.
