

Off to Seek Fortunes

Orphans from the Barnardo Homes, England, smile happily as they leave by railway for a port whence they'll be taken to Canada for adoption. They're confident happy homes await them there.

TODAY'S FASHIONS

Lines From a Grecian Urn

If you have a fancy for the classical, you may choose your winter costume according to the mode prevailing in the year 100 B. C. Side drapes, full blouse and straight necklines all are as popular now as then.

Paris—The idea of an embroidered initial or monogram or even the wearer's name set on the blouse or sweater may indicate, as has been asserted more than once, a child-like mind. But if this is so the number of child-like minds is increasing rapidly. Today the fashionable location of such an embroidered initial or monogram—the name being no longer in favor—is not the front nor even the shoulder of the blouse. It is high on the left sleeve.

London—There are three modes in sleeves today. A frock may have no sleeves at all, it may be provided with sleeves that are long and snug, or it may flaunt by sheer draperies from shoulder to wrist, which do not pretend to touch the arm at any other points. One gown of black crepe marocain had a narrow girdle of cerise silk braid. The sleeves were merely lengths of this braid hanging loosely behind the arm and attached at wrist and shoulder.

New York—It is a far cry, indeed, from corset of years ago to the one most recently placed in the smart shops. The old-fashioned corset was a formidable contraption that bolstered up the figure in a stiff combination of heavy cloth and steels. The latest corset is a dainty girder of elastic and lace, a step-in without laces or, indeed, fastenings of any sort. It is intended, moreover, for the plump as well as the slender.

New York—Thrice happy this autumn is the woman with a long and willowy neck. It is upon her, and not on her less favored sister, that the high and ever higher fur coat looks its best. Some of the chokers which top the new coats being worn today are so tall they conceal part of the nose as well as the ears. With one of these new enveloping collars and a hat set in accordance with fashion's decree low over the forehead, not much of the face is visible except the eyes.

New York—It is possible to buy a buckle in the shape of a shoe tongue, smartly gone in open work and rhinestones. A buckle of this sort is used on an evening slipper, and in itself serves to indicate the favor in which elaborate shoe tongues are held at the moment. For a formal pump with an intricate open work tongue of leather or satin, there is a square buckle of cut leather which adds greatly to the beauty of the shoe.

New York—The apron today is back in fashion. But, of course, in these topsy-turvy times it is not an apron which serves any utilitarian use. This season's apron is merely a detached panel of some glorious fabric which ties about the waist or is loosely attached to the gown. As often as not, the apron ties in front and drapes back. Now and then it is twisted around to one side.

Largest Locomotives
Cost $60,000 Each

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, Oct. 2.—The Denver and Rio Grande Western railroad recently secured ten locomotives which are said to be the largest ever constructed for passenger service. They are ninety-five feet long, weight 644,000 pounds and cost approximately $60,000 each.

At present the new engines are used in freight service but after sufficient lumbering up will be put on passenger runs. Officials of the road believe they will be able to haul passenger trains over grades where now two or three of the smaller type are required.
