AS OTHERS SEE US

THE "Klamath Falls, California" series of editorials in the Oregon Journal is interesting. The Journal shows an intimate knowledge of the Klamath country and its problems. The following comment is very much to the point and shows advantages that we are prone to overlook, but which at longer range bulk large:

At Malin, the new town built on the former bed of Tule lake in Klamath county, there is a still more youthful cheese factory. Its output takes the common route of the products of the Klamath country—to San Francisco. But this is the course it takes:

First of all, shipments must be hauled by truck 40 miles to the city of Klamath Falls. From this point they are shipped by train to San Francisco. The rate is $1.58 a hundred pounds in less than carload lots.

Tillamook is much farther from San Francisco than Klamath Falls, but the rate on cheese from Tillamook by rail to San Francisco is 87 cents.

The latter rate is, of course, compelled by water competition, but the Klamath Falls rate, two and a half times that charged Tillamook for a less distance, is illustrative. It shows what happens to a country which lacks competitive transportation either of rail or water.

But other figures are still more revealing. Tillamook has in farms only 91,800 acres. Klamath has 357,000 acres in farms. Tillamook's yield of dairy products was valued in 1919 at $1,760,000; Klamath's at $198,000.

The product of the Malin cheese factory ought not to be taxed $1.58 a hundred freight rate to San Francisco after an expensive truck haul. The Klamath country ought to have a railroad that will extend to its producing centers. It ought to have more than a line that ends at Klamath Falls, necessitating long truck or wagon hauls to reach the railroad. It ought to have a service that would gather up the wheat of the region and carry it at a rate less than 35 cents a hundred pounds to market. There ought to be at least a branch packing house at Klamath Falls so that more of the value of the livestock industry could be left in the district.

Above all, Natron cut-off should be constructed to connect the Klamath country with Portland, its natural market and distributing center.

When the Natron cut-off is built Klamath Falls will not only be 200 rail miles nearer Portland than at present. It will not only be 105 miles nearer Portland than San Francisco, rather than 95 miles nearer San Francisco, as at present, Klamath Falls, with the Natron cut-off, would be as near Portland by railroad as Medford. Klamath Falls ought to have the same rates as Medford enjoys. It ought to have the same opportunity to market its products.

What millions of dollars in trade the construction of the Natron cut-off would mean to Portland; what a difference it would make in the development of Klamath county's vast agricultural area!

What are Portland business men doing to expedite the building of the Natron cut-off?

NEW ACADEMY OF SCIENCES TO SHOW STARTLING WONDERS

WASHINGTON, Oct. 2.—Have you ever seen the sun's spots? Have you ever seen demonstrated Foucault's celebrated pendulum experiment to prove the rotation of the earth? Have you ever watched the antics of minute infusorians swimming in water? With the completion of the new home of the national academy of sciences at Washington, these things will be a regular part of the interesting exhibits open to the public.

It is hoped to have the building completed by the fall of 1923. It will be located near the recently dedicated Lincoln memorial and will be three stories high. The first floor will be given over to public and museum purposes where many scientific facts will be demonstrated. The two upper floors will be devoted to offices.

The main demonstration feature will be under a dome in the central lobby, where the sun-spot phenomena will be demonstrated. A colossal telescope mounted in the dome, will form a large image of the sun on the white surface of a circular table in the middle of the room. Here visitors will see the spots on the sun's disc, changing in number and form, from day to day and moving across the disc as the sun revolves on its axis.

Foucault's experiment demonstration will be embodied in a 60 foot pendulum swinging in a wide arc. The swinging pendulum will mark an invariable direction in space, and as the earth revolves beneath it, rotation will be plainly shown by the steady change in direction of the pendulum's swing a divided arc. Here the pressure of light, earthquake action, magnetic storms, the gravitational pull of small masses, the growth of plants, diving bacteria and other phenomena will be the subjects of other exhibits.

In the seven exhibition rooms surrounding the central rotunda, the latest results of scientific and industrial research will be demonstrated.

One week there may be displayed the latest forms of radio telephony and the next perhaps a set of psychological tests or a new find of fossils or a series of synthetic compounds.

The building, designed to cost $5,000,000, was the gift of the Carnegie corporation, provided the academy of sciences secured a suitable site. The ground was bought with a fund of $200,000 collected by donations throughout the country. This method was followed in order that every section of the nation might feel it owned a share. The building will be of marble in classic simplicity.

Cigarettes Are Held Grave Menace to Health

LONDON, Oct. 3.—The enormous increase of cigarette smoking among women, says the medical correspondent of the London Times, calls for some protest by the medical profession. He declares the habit in many instances is passing beyond a pleasure and becoming a vice.

"The absorption of nicotine, which is the danger element in the matter," the correspondent proceeds, "produces a condition of nervous distress which is frequently painful to observe. From this proceed palpitations and exhaustion and outbursts of emotion. Woman's delicate nervous organism was certainly not intended to endure large doses of this poison. Her functions as a mother cannot but be interfered with when she indulges in it to excess."

It is the habit of many English women and girls to make cigarettes in public, and not a few may be seen in restaurants and hotels smoking long, slender pipes. Women's organizations and social improvement societies have begun a crusade against this "inelegant and unwomanly practice."

FINAL SCENE OF "HENRY AND ME" TO COME OCTOBER 3D.

EMPORIA, Kan., Oct. 3.—Final scene in the latest episode of "Henry and Me" is scheduled to be staged in the district court here at the term opening October 3. This will pertain quite definitely to a "legal adventure," rather than one of a martial nature as was the original, a book written by William Allen White, Emporia editor and author, concerning the experiences of his life long friend, Gov. H. J. Allen of Kansas, and himself, in Red Cross service overseas during the world war. In the coming "adventure," White will be defendant on a charge of violation of the Kansas industrial court act, sponsored by Governor Allen because White hung in the window of his newspaper office a placard expressing sympathy for the striking railroad shopworkers.

If the case comes to trial, the issue of "free speech" involved may be legally determined. White contended that the order directing he and others to remove the strike sympathy placards was a violation of the privileges of free speech. Governor Allen has stated repeatedly that the question of free speech is not involved—that the display of the signs constituted joining a conspiracy to prevent men taking the places of the striking shopmen. The Kansas industrial court law prohibits conspiracies designed to interfere with the operation of any industry necessary to public welfare.

White refused to remove the placard when ordered to by Attorney General R. J. Hopkins, but, following issuance of the state warrant and his technical arraignment in the district court, he agreed that pending determination of the validity of the act, the placard should remain down. Both the governor and White declare that this upshot of a "legal adventure" has not at all violated their long personal friendship which became so firmly sealed by their "martial adventure" overseas.

Divorce Flourishing In City of Fiume

FIUME, Oct. 3.—This city counts a population of 50,000; 15,000 of them received decrees of divorce in the years 1920 and 1921. Divorce seems to be the most flourishing of the local industries, and it is making the city famous.

The reason is that the severance of the marital bond is easy here, and people desiring freedom flock to Fiume from neighboring states where divorces are not granted. Anyone can get a divorce in Fiume who has lived in the city long enough to acquire the rights of citizenship.

Complications, however, occasionally arise. The case is still remembered of an Italian woman who acquired the citizenship of Fiume and divorced her husband, who remained an Italian subject. Shortly after her divorce she remarried and returned to Italy, where she was promptly imprisoned for bigamy, the Italian law considering her divorce null and void, her husband being an Italian, and, as such, not entitled to divorce.

English Immigrants Lucky In Australia

MELBOURNE, Oct. 3.—Australia as a land of opportunity for the immigrant from England is catching the imagination of the English people, according to a letter received here from the Australian high commissioner in London, Sir Joseph Cook.

Sir Joseph declared recently in a speech that one immigrant from England came to Australia with nine pence in his pocket and now is in charge of the Australian immigration service in London. He was referring to Jack Barnes, who is also owner of 15,000 acres of wheat lands in the commonwealth. In the week following the speech the high commissioner's office received 24,000 requests for information on how to get to Australia under the immigration provisions.
