BILL LEE TELLS 'EM

(Portland Journal)

OREGON assessors met at Salem last week. The matter of railroad transportation in Klamath county came before them.

A railroad man who was present—railroad men always attend the meetings of assessors—said the cost to the railroad of hauling a ton of farm products from Klamath Falls to market was $7.

But there sat in the audience a Klamath man, Will T. Lee, the newly re-elected assessor of that county. "Do you know," he asked, "that although it may cost the railroad $7 a ton to haul our stuff hundreds of miles to market, it costs the farmers of Malin, 25 miles from Klamath Falls, $7 a ton to haul their stuff by truck to Klamath Falls, and thus it costs them $14—a prohibitive charge—to get their products from the farm to the consumer?"

Assessor Lee was armed with other figures. He showed that what the farmers of Malin district in Klamath county had paid in freight charges for their 35-mile haul to the railroad took all their profits. Malin is the community established near the former bed of Tule lake. This lake was reclaimed for agriculture by diverting the river which flowed into it and by letting evaporators do the rest. Where once the waters rippled there are now haystacks and alfalfa and grain fields that reach to the far line of the horizon.

But despite almost phenomenal production, transportation costs brought to the farmers disappointment and defeat.

At Malin is a cheese factory with exceptionally fine output. The feed grown in the district is particularly valuable in producing high quality dairy products, but it costs $30.40 a ton to ship the cheese just around the mountains to Medford. The product of cheese factories many times farther away reaches what should be a primary market of the Klamath country at much less freight cost. That is the reason the cheese industry of Klamath county lags when it should be flourishing.

The people of Klamath county, said Assessor Lee, are set for prosperity. Their mills are running; their bank clearings are increasing. Even the courthouse fund is nearly forgotten. They have heard a great deal of talk and propaganda related to the unmerger controversy, but what they want is railroad building. They want the construction of the Natron cutoff. They want feeder lines built to their newly productive centers. They want to be linked to Portland and other markets which they reach now under an almost impossible handicap.

Reference is frequently made to "Klamath County, California." The district will continue to be linked with California by sentiment while the Klamath country, has but one stub railroad and that reaching up from California.

AT THE THEATRES

THE STRAND

No book of recent years received greater attention when it was first given the public than Myrtle Reed's "A Spinner in the Sun," and but few have been able to hold the place in popular favor that that novel has. In "The Veiled Woman" shown at The Strand tonight we have the screen version of that great novel.

Those who have seen the picture call it a wonderful pictorialization of the story and are struck in their praises of the photo version. It is worth seeing.

There is also a good comedy tonight at the Strand, making one of the best rounded out programs ever offered to Klamath Falls theatre audiences.

PINE TREE

Those who attended the Pine Tree yesterday are enthusiastic in their praises of Jackie Coogan in "My Boy" which will be shown again tonight and should draw a full house from those unable to attend Sunday.

Jackie Coogan is, perhaps, the most popular juvenile actor on the screen. He plays his part in the picture with all the skill of an adult actor and he registers all the emotions, from grave to gay, with a correctness and punch that pulls the heartstrings of the spectator no matter whether young or old, whether naive or blasé.

Through mistake Jackie gets mixed up with a family of eight children and thus gets through the clutches of the immigration authorities, who were ready to deport him. Homeless and hungry, yet cheerful and optimistic, Jackie follows a crusty old sea captain to his humble home. By his lovable personality and his willingness to help in the household duties, Jackie wins his way into the stony heart of the old sailor. Adventures in plenty make Jackie's life one of excitement and devoid of monotony, and eventually he finds a happy home amid luxurious surroundings.

THE LIBERTY

"Too Much Business," a straight comedy in six reels, adapted from Earl Derr Bigler's original story in the Saturday Evening Post, "John Henry and the Restless Sex," will be shown at The Liberty Theater tonight.

This production, called the greatest six-reel comedy of the past four years, was made on the Pacific coast under the personal direction of Jess Robbins. It is unique in motion picture entertainment, as it is not comedy in the sense usually ascribed to motion pictures. There is not the slightest touch of slapstick about it, although the comedy action occasionally borders on the farcical.

Once in a while a story is written, a play produced or a picture filmed, which rises so far above the common creations of art as to stand alone in teaching great neglected truths about life. "Les Miserables," "Vanity Fair"—these were such stories. "Human Hearts," written by Wallace Reid's father, Hal Reid, was such a play, and "Human Hearts," the picture, carried forward onto the screen the great facts of the play. The photoplay is a Universal-Jewel, starring House Peters, directed by King Baggot. It was considered such a worthy epic when completed that the executives of Universal classed it as one of the three biggest productions ever made by that company, associating it in this respect with "Foolish Wives" and "The Storm." It comes to the Liberty Theatre tomorrow.

Largest Coin

Farren Zerle, of Cincinnati, is holding the world's largest coin. It's an old Swedish copper plate weighing more than six pounds and measuring 19 1/2 inches square. Worth $4 in exchange value.
