LIGHT HEAT POWER

The necessities of progress of any city are told in these three words.

Today there is one substitute for the three words which means all that they do and that word is

ELECTRICITY

And it means even more because it means those three things and it means their delivery where wanted in a convenient and cleanly manner.

Your power company stands ready to supply your needs in these three things and do it economically. Other sources of heat, light or power cannot compare in convenience and cost with electricity.

INDUSTRIES OF COAST BOOMING

Federal Reserve Agent's Report Shows Continued Activities in all Lines

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 2.—Despite the approach of winter and the shortage of freight cars in many sections, there was no slackening in industrial activity during October, according to the report of John Perrin, San Francisco, Federal reserve agent for the twelfth district, made public here today.

Mr. Perrin's report follows: "Banks of the district have financed the harvesting and marketing of crops practically without aid of the federal reserve bank. Country member banks actually reduced their borrowings from the federal reserve bank during the month. City member banks increased their total loans and discounts and also their borrowings from the federal reserve bank, but the total of their reductions on Nov. 8, $29,652,000, was less than 50 percent of what it was one year ago.

"As a result of an increase of 1/2 percent in San Francisco and declines in Los Angeles, and Seattle, the prevailing rate of interest on customers' loans is now practically uniform at 5 1/2 to 6 per cent in the leading financial centers of the Pacific coast.

"Production of lumber during October was at record levels. Shipments were curtailed by the car shortage and mills were reluctant to accept new orders, the prompt shipment of which would not be promised.

"Consumption of the principal mineral products of the district continues to exceed present output and stocks have been or are being reduced to normal levels. Metal prices have remained steady or have advanced, the market for lead and zinc being particularly active.

"Production of petroleum in California at 542,885 barrels per day increased 6.4 per cent over the previous record month of September, 1922, chiefly due to flash output in the newer fields at Santa Fe springs and Huntington Beach. Current consumption also increased but was less than production, and storage stocks rose to 57,569,832 barrels on Nov. 1, 1922, compared with 32,116,456 barrels held on Nov. 1, 1921.

"The number of building permits issued in 29 principal cities during Oct. 1922, was 12,254, a record for this district and an increase of 7.9 percent over the number issued in Oct. 1921.

"Employment conditions at the beginning of the winter season are reported to be better than normal. The usual seasonal decrease in the demand for workers in outdoor activities has been largely offset by an increased demand in other industries.

"Prices of nearly all of the more important agricultural products rose during October and, despite the car shortage, the movement of the districts crops to market was accelerated. The general price level, as shown by the United States bureau of labor index number, which uses 1913 prices as 100, advanced from 153 in September to 154 in October.

"Reporting department stores in this district enjoyed the best October trade in their history during the past month. The value of sales of 32 stores was 10.3 percent greater than in October 1921. Eight of the ten lines of wholesale trade for which sales figures are assembled, showed an increase in the value of sales in October, 1922, compared with October, 1921.

"If figures for San Francisco be excluded, the total of bank debits in reporting cities of the district was 22.7 percent greater during October 1922, than during the corresponding month a year ago. Including the figures for San Francisco the same comparison shows an increase of 5.8 percent.

"Business failures during the month were greater both in number and in liabilities than in September, 1922, or October 1921."

Woman Writes Her Impressions After Seeing Prize-Fight

When by chance I discovered a man of my acquaintance directly behind me, with a look on his face which plainly said I had been crossed from his calling list; in other words it was a Puritanical look. With a defiant twist of my shoulders I turned back to face the ring, but instead looked right into the eyes of three estimable men, friends of my family, who were aware of the fact that I should not be there I was.

Everything pointed to my evening being spoiled, when suddenly a bell clanked and Fred Garich stepped into the roped-in corral and asked that the men who were smoking, which meant every man in the room, to please put out their cigars and pipes in order that the audience might see what was going on as well as to allow the fighters air to breathe.

Continued to Smoke
The fans listened quietly and then continued to smoke a little harder. Just then through the haze I caught a glimpse of Tuffy Anderson and Kid Riehn as they swaggered into the ring. They seated themselves in opposite corners, threw off their bath-towels and, assuming a position of ease, allowed themselves to be patted and rubbed, a process which I rather think could be done to better advantage in the dressing room.

Another bell clanked and with my girl friend's hand in mine I waited to see these two small children beat each other into a bloody pulp. But this never happened. My eyes, unaccustomed as they were to this new form of sport, registered nothing but a whirlwind of arms, terminating with fists in big gloves, which attempted to deal blows. The blows didn't as much as stagger the two fighters. This bout was soon over and the referee held an arm belonging to each fighter up in the air, thus declaring it to be a draw, or perhaps a tie. Anyway, money was thrown into the ring and the two boys were kept busy for some time gathering up the coins.

Disapproved Hugs
The preliminary bout, between a colored boy and a white boy, I really did not enjoy due to the tendency of the colored fighter to hug his white companion. Some one near me said the white kid had the fight because all the rounds had been his and although I couldn't see just how he figured, I guess he was right because the referee held up the white kid's arm.

The next fight was a disappointment due to the man I had picked out as a positive winner getting his eye cut in the first round. I felt sorry about that, but was not impressed to any great extent because I've seen football players fight to a finish when they had a lot worse cuts and hurts. Then the main bout was on and I began to steel myself the fighters air to breathe.

Looked the Part
All I remember about the main bout is the fact that Espen was most awfully dark and prize-fighter-like, big jaw and so on; Swindler, on the other hand, was blond and lacking in jaw and cauliflower ears, but I decided if I had to bet he should get my money.

The rest is a blurred recollection of yells, which I didn't understand.

Many Victrolas were selected a month ago for Christmas gifts. How about yours? Your own terms in reason.

all of which came from the fans, snortings from the fighters and flying fists with Espen falling into the ropes now and then to break the general monotony. This about scared me to death because it caused me to conjure up pictures of a man with a broken neck. The only blow which I could place during this bout was a punch Espen gave my favorite which blacked his eye. However there were a number of others, but I cannot tell for the life of me who hit who or where they hit.

It's all over now and I feel so daring and brave and a lot wiser about prize fights. And best of all I know now that a man isn't necessarily blood-thirsty because he attends prize fights. If he were I'm sure he would come away dissatisfied. Furthermore, I shall attend the next card—is that the correct term?
