

BIRDS BLOWN FAR TO SEA LANDED ON DECKS OF STEAMER

LIVERPOOL, Dec. 7.—Thousands of American land birds, blown to sea by unfavorable winds, sought safety on the decks of the Cunard liner Scythia on her last trip from New York, and stayed on board until she docked in Liverpool. When that return overtook the feathered travelers they were migrating, probably from the north Atlantic states to the warm lands bordering on the Caribbean. Now many of them remain free, but in England, thousands of miles from their destination, and those supposed to be wise to bird lore have not yet been able to give satisfactory answers to the questions of interested passengers as to whether the birds would still endeavor to reach their summer haunts in the West Indies, or join the robins and linnets of England in their winter flight to southern France and northern Africa.

The great flock, several thousand in number, settled on the decks when the steamer was about 1000 miles from the American shore, and transformed her into a captive aviary. Wild canaries, robins, linnets, thrushes, sand pipers and juncos, fluttered around the decks, perched on the rigging and penetrated the lounges and engine room. The passengers, and crew cared for them, giving them warmth and shelter, but even so many of the smaller birds died from exhaustion. Three owls and a score of pigeons were easily captured. Old sea travelers say they never have known birds to alight before in such numbers on a single ship.
