A CREDIT EITHER WAY

THE splendid results being attained in the way of paying off the war debt, and showing a surplus of government receipts over expenses, put our democratic thinkers and orators under quite a strain, and they find it difficult to account for this condition in accordance with their theories.

The way that some of them explain the situation is this: That the surplus of receipts for the past year is only in small measure due to the economies introduced by the past administration, but is the result of the unexpected revenue, which proved hundreds of millions of dollars more than was anticipated, so that it was an easy matter to finish the fiscal year with a surplus.

This is much as if a business man should take hold of a concern that had been poorly managed, and after pulling it out of the hole and cutting its expenses and enlarging its income, should be told that he was not to have any credit for his achievement, because its receipts proved so much larger than was expected.

The increased revenue of the government for the past year is no mere matter of luck and chance. It is due to the fact that sound business policies have been applied to the running of the country. The business community has been given confidence that legitimate business would be encouraged, which has inspired every enterprising man to go ahead in a normal way and employ labor and do business as usual. These causes increase the income of the government. Also the customs revenue has been increased. Insofar as people feel they must patronize foreign industries instead of assisting the American producers with their orders, it is right that they should pay heavier tariff rates.

So the democrats can take their choice. If they think the existing surplus, accomplished in spite of tremendous difficulties, is not due to republican economy, then it must be all the more due to a wonderful revival of prosperity that has taken place since the republicans began to run the government.

THE "SUMMER GIRL"

MUCH used to be said of the so-called "summer girl," who was supposed to fascinate the men by her charms at summer resorts. She was commonly conceived of as a very bewitching creature, but with a tendency to be fickle in her affections. Sometimes she would become engaged to several men during a season. She would soon reach familiar terms with men after short acquaintance, but if she met these same men in her home town, might scarcely recognize them.

There have always been girls of that type at summer resorts. The life of such gathering places makes people friendly with strangers. They get acquainted more rapidly in a week than they would in home surroundings in months. The young people of today are called free and easy, and many love affairs make rapid progress under romantic scenes and with assistance of moonlight.

Yet the modern girl may not be as languishing and easily won as the girls of former years. The interest which these young women take in athletics has affected their point of view. Formerly many girls would sit around on hotel and cottage piazzas, with little interest in anything but the men, and their hearts set on making new conquests. But the modern girl with her tennis and golf and horseback riding and various sports, has other resources.

The multitude of girls of that type are thinking more of sports and pastimes and their future careers than they are of meeting the men. A fellow has got to be a fairly good sport and in good physical condition to keep up with them. They could completely tire out a lot of the willie boys who used to go out to the summer hotels with the idea of taking a string of female scalps.

President Harding on Alaska Trip Finds Modern Rail Facilities

ANCHORAGE, Alaska, July 23.—When President Harding reached Alaska and took stock of the Alaska railroad he found it equipped with: 34 passenger cars—coaches, mail and baggage, diners, observation-diners, business, sleepers, compartment-observation, etc.; 907 freight cars—box, flat, gondola, stock, refrigerator, ballast and dump; 32 launches, tugs, barges, lighters and other marine equipment, including two river steamers now operating over a thousand miles of interior waterways; 92 pieces of miscellaneous equipment, such as steam shovels, ditchers, pile drivers, locomotive cranes, etc.

The last available report shows the following employees: Six administrative, 171 transportation, 556 maintenance of line, 346 construction, 283 mechanical, 41 accounting and disbursing; 139 supply, 84 mining, 21 hospital, 10 purchasing, 65 miscellaneous; total 1,722.

Due to the construction of the spur into the Moose Creek bituminous fields the construction item is increased to approximately 583, while the item for miners employed is reduced to a crew of maintenance of way men through the cessation by the government of mining for railroad fuel, being relieved by the output of private mines.

The Moose Creek spur is expected to create a local contribution of $10,000 per month in payroll and supplies, with promises of other increases when coal prospects in course of development begin adding their quota to the sum total of railroad and to domestic demands.

In line with the plan for marketing coal on the Pacific coast of the United States and the coast of Alaska, agents of the Alaska Bituminous Coal company are now in the states seeking the purchase of one or more coal luggers, one to be used in supplying coastwise trade of Alaska and the other to transport coal to the states.

Owing to pressing demand for equipment to handle the regular traffic of the railroad, the Moose creek spur will be a narrow gauge, temporarily, the equipment of the Tanana valley road being transferred to Moose creek where the spur will be reoperated by a company formed for the purpose.

It has been discovered that Panama flat cars may be converted into box cars and refrigerator cars cheaper in Alaska than finished cars can be shipped in and added facilities for manufacturing equipment have been supplied the mechanical department, which is steadily turning out freight equipment. A severe test was given the mechanical department just prior to the arrival of the congressional party. The 80-foot combination drawing room and observation car Kenal suffered a smashed roof and was out of commission. There was not a regular diner capable of accommodating the party of ninety. Within forty-eight hours a coach was converted into a regulation diner and the Kenal was turned out of the shops ready for operation.

AT THE PINE TREE

"Minnie," the new Marshall Neilan picture released by First National, is a realistic page from real life in a small town country hotel. Neilan has made all his characters look and act humanly and he has put into the picture much rare humor. Neilan in giving advice to scenario writers once said: "Don't do the obvious."

Those who have seen "Minnie" know he practiced what he preached, for he gives something different at every turn in this mirth-making drama.

Leatrice Joy plays the part of "Minnie" and with her is Matt Moore. Now the "obvious" thing for Neilan to do was to give both "straight" parts. They had always done that kind. But Neilan didn't do the obvious. He has made Matt and Leatrice shine in their odd role. "Minnie" is at the Pine Tree tonight.

AT THE LIBERTY

A perfect reproduction of Vesuvius in eruption is afforded by the remarkable volcano and earthquake scenes in "The Vermilion Pencil," Sessue Hayakawa's powerful melodrama showing at the Liberty theatre Tuesday. The flood of flaming lava rushes down the side of the mountains and settles over entire villages, smothering out the lives of thousands of helpless natives. The earth rocks at the same time and sends huge structures tottering to the ground in fragments. There are other smashing thrills, including the rescue of Bessie Love from death in a raging whirlpool, in the making of which scene Sessue Hayakawa came within an inch of losing his life. Gorgeous costumes and sets add a note of lavishness to this most unusual production, the story of which is based upon the memorable novel by Homer Lea.

BOY DOUBLES

COIN PRODUCTION

A negro tenant boy on a large plantation in Faulkner County, Ark., has given the tenants on that plantation and other neighbors a new idea of corn yield from the soil of that community, according to reports to the United States Department of Agriculture. The soil is naturally fertile, but under prevailing methods of cultivation only produces an average of about 45 bushels of corn per acre. With the consent of the landlord, this 15-year-old boy, Walter Flower, last year planted and cultivated 1 acre of corn on the plantation under the supervision of the agriculture extension agent, paying all of his own expenses. He harvested 91 bushels, making a net profit of $53. Twelve tenants on this plantation, as well as a number of others in the community, are following the extension agent's instructions this year in growing corn as a result of the demonstration.

KLAMATH WATER

INJUNCTION FAILS

WASHINGTON, July 23.—Injunction proceedings seeking to prevent the federal power commission from leasing and developing the water power of the Klamath national forest reserve in California, were dismissed yesterday by Chief Justice McCoy in the District of Columbia supreme court.

The petition for an injunction was filed by Steve Super and Ben Wilder, on behalf of the Kerek or Pen-Tsick Indians, inhabitants of the forest. The court held that the petitioners had failed to set up a cause of the reserve.
