CRIME GROWTH IS DISCLOSED BY BAR COMMITTEE

ulation there were 1,562 murders. Only 17 Murders

In London there were 17 murders. Only nine of these were classified as first degree. Scotland Yard ended the year with none of them "unsolved." During the same period Chicago had 137 recorded murders, and New York 260—the latter city obtaining three convictions.

The annual homicide rate per 100,000 population in Hartford, Conn., is 1.4. It is 56.8 in Memphis, Tenn.

"The largest proportionate ratio of crime is in our cities of less than 200,000 population," says the committee. "It therefore may be conservatively estimated that in this republic last year there occurred 7,850 murders. To these may be added 6,790 cases of manslaughter and other unlawful killings, totalling 14,640 unjustified homicides."

England Is Severe
England is severe in punishing murderers. The death penalty often is imposed, although prison sentences usually are brief compared to ours. In France, where crime is less severely punished, murder is more frequent.

Eight states of the union have abolished capital punishment. In five others it had been outlawed, but now is reinstated. Thus there were 92 executions in this country in 1919.

"But to prove that our failure to inflict the death penalty did not proceed from an excess of tenderness," the committee points out, "we successfully put over 83 largely attended lynchings."

Commendable Features
Jurists visiting English and French courts on behalf of the American bar reported several commendable features in each. Justice was expedited. A criminal was tried, convicted and punished while details of his crime were still fresh in the minds of the public, and the "horrible example" theory of punishment was therefore effective.

This country is notorious for its long drawn out prosecutions, says the committee. Two or three years elapse between the crime and the execution, sometimes, and "a first verdict judgment forms merely the preliminary skirmish."

Discussing the prospect of speeding the trial of prisoners in the United States; of eliminating the disappearance of witnesses, falsification of defenses and loss of testimony, the committee concludes:

Would Awaken Public

"The first greatest work to be accomplished in bringing about a better enforcement of law must be the awakening of the public to a clear sense of their responsibility for it. Improvement in our laws can accomplish little unless accompanied by a determination on the part of our citizens to have those laws enforced."

"We recommend that a permanent commission of this association be appointed to formulate a standard code of criminal procedure for the states of the union. It is of first

How To Get The Most For Your Furs

Leave no fat on the hide when preparing to tan it.
Split the tail and skin out the bone.
Do not hold your hides throughout the summer as grease burns result from long storage before tanning.
Wash all blood off the hide before stretching it, as blood clots cause the fur to slip.
Stretch the hide to make it long, rather than wide.
Put no alum on raw skins.
When properly cured bring to us and receive the highest market price.
