FIVE HUNTING SEASON VICTIMS

SALEM, Dec. 29.—Hunting accidents resulted in the death of five persons and injury of eight others in Oregon during the fall seasons on deer, small game and birds.

This toll of human life was revealed in the summary of accident reports completed this week by the Oregon State Game commission. A careful check of all fatalities and injuries has been supplied the commission through district deputy game wardens.

A total of 10 counties are listed in the summary with Douglas county at the head of the list. One person was killed and one injured in Douglas hunting accidents. Umatilla and Walla Walla counties each reported two injuries. One death was reported in each of four counties, Lane, Linn, Jackson and Yamhill, and one injury each was reported by Curry, Deschutes and Coos counties.

The most common mistake of believing a man to be a deer caused the death of two hunters and injury of two. The accidental discharge of guns killed three and injured two. Careless aim caused the injury of four persons.

It was not hunters alone who were killed or injured. One nine-year-old girl was killed by accidental discharge of a rifle and a 10-year-old boy was injured for the same reason. Two other small boys were injured by the careless aim of a hunter.

Rifles were responsible for the death of four persons and injury of four. Shotguns claimed five victims, of which one was killed.

Notices have been sent to those responsible for these accidents calling their attention to the provision of the Oregon laws, which prohibits any person guilty of accidentally killing or injuring another person from carrying or bearing fire-arms in this state. This provision, of course, excepts the right to bear fire-arms in self defense and does not apply to peace officers or members of military organizations while on duty.
