One year in Klamath is worth a thousand in Louisiana was his opinion. HOGS AND BEARS DINE TOGETHER

ST. JOE, Idaho, Jan. 3.—A squad of semi-tame bears that fed from the same troughs with a number of hogs belonging to a lumber camp near here without displaying their pro-possession for pork on the hoof, is described by Rupert Tinker, who was employed at the camp until a short time ago.

According to Tinker, when the bears first began to visit the quarters of the hogs, some objection was raised by the porters, but after a few weeks, both sides became on friendly terms.

After spending a large portion of the summer at the camp without molesting their hosts, Tinker said, the bears recently disappeared for their annual hibernation.

Herald Net Circulation on January 2nd 1924 Was 2274

against a net circulation of 1769 on January 2nd 1923

A Gain in 12 months of more than 500

What's the Reason?

Some of the increase no doubt is due to increased population, but the chief cause is the general realization that the Herald is giving service that deserves support—that this paper is accurate and reliable in its news columns, fair in its editorial policy, generous in its support of every community cause.

The Wise Advertiser

in planning his 1924 campaign cannot afford to overlook Herald circulation

And he will not overlook the important fact that his advertising will enter 500 more homes than a year ago, reach the eyes of at least 2000 more readers—and without any increase in cost to him.

That's the sort of a New Year's greeting, the kind of a New Year's present, that must appeal to the business man who is preparing to get his share of 1924 prosperity.
