ELEVENTH HOUR AT THE LIBERTY

Speed Drama Booked for Liberty; Jones at Head of Cast

In number, speed and magnitude, the stunts seen in "The Eleventh Hour," at the Liberty Theatre Sunday and Monday exceed those of any previous melodramas. The cast, headed by Charles Jones and Shirley Mason, includes June Elvidge and Alan Hale.

An heiress to a vast estate is the dupes of a scheming father and an ambitious foreign prince. The father desires the fortune which she possesses; the prince desires the potent vial which an inventor is her employ concocted. An Irishman, whom she loves, causes her mental suffering by putting her in doubt of his honesty. He did this for patriotic reasons, not daring to reveal his true identity.

Another interesting thrill is composed of the shooting of Miss Mason and Charles Jones through the torpedo tubes of a submerged submarine.

If you like good, old-fashioned, pulsing, pounding melodrama, see "The Eleventh Hour," at the Liberty Sunday and Monday.

Married—Not to Each Other, But to Their Art, Through a Common Bond

SCREEN followers are seeing la petite Marie Prevost and debonair Monte Blue so often in co-starring parts, that they might excusably wonder if there were collusion under foot. As a screen team they have been found so perfect, that Warner Bros. with whom they have long starring contracts, play them together.

First it was in "Brass" as man and wife; then it was in the Ernst Lubitsch production, as man and wife; then again in Elinor Glyn's "How to Educate a Wife," as man and somebody else's wife; and more recently in "Being Respectable," adapted from Grace Flandrau's best seller.

Isn't the above picture proof enough that they collaborate well?

COVERED WAGON IS AMAZING FILM

Thrilling Picture Coming to Pine Tree in Tale of Early Days

Providing a new standard for comparison, "The Covered Wagon" is a romance of the days when the star of empire gleamed bronchlike in the Western sky and when brave men and women risked their lives fearlessly in their efforts to build up a mighty kingdom. "The Covered Wagon" not only paints in indelible and realistic colors pictures of the west in its making, but tells a love story of great sweetness—love in rumbling wagon trails amid hostile Indians, fierce prairie fires and with wild rides over shimmering sand and swollen streams.

Every character in "The Covered Wagon" is a real human being. Each represents the pride of American manhood and womanhood of pre-gold discovery days in California and Oregon. Some are bad, others indifferent, but the majority are of a noble nature, staunch and true. It is these human qualities which make the story of this tremendous production tense, appealing and wonderfully effective as screen entertainment.

"The Covered Wagon" is a photoplay which serves a double purpose. It entertains and instructs. It pleases both the eye and the mind. People who do not care for motion pictures are urged to see "The Covered Wagon," as an example of what can be done in modern picture production. Klamath Falls and surrounding country will have the opportunity of seeing this great picture at the Pine Tree theater on July 4-5-6-7, during the Rodeo.

RADIO STATION IS PROTECTING SHIPS

OAKLAND, June 27.—Protection of ships in Pacific waters is afforded by the radio broadcasting equipment at KGO, the General Electric Pacific Coast station.

Listening intently every second of the time a program is being broadcast from some vessel, an expert radio operator in the control room at KGO keeps an accurate log of what he hears. This is proof that listening was actually being done on the 800 meter wave length used by ships. Should an SOS call be heard the great voice of KGO would very quickly be silenced. Half a mile away from the studio building, in the power house, a 600 meter transmitter is always ready for an attempt to communicate with the stricken ship.

Federal regulations provide that listening in must be done by every broadcast three minutes out of each fifteen. But that no opportunity to give aid might be lost listening is done continuously at KGO.

CAPABLE CAST IN PINE TREE FILM

The Allan Dwan Paramount production of "Big Brother," a Rex Beach novel, which will be shown at the Pine Tree Theatre tomorrow and Monday.

Heading the list of players, who bring the famous story to the silver sheet, is Tom Moore in the role of Jimmy Donovan, the leader of the Car Barn gang on New York's lower East side. Edith Roberts, whose recent return to the studios after an illness finds her in greater popularity than ever, plays the feminine lead.

"Big Brother," is a penetrating story of the lower East side. In Jimmy Donovan the author, Rex Beach has painted a character human and lovable. The story concerns the resolutions of the gang leader to correct his ways after his lieutenant had been killed by the hater from the god of a leader of a rival gang. In dying the lieutenant had asked his chief to take care of his little brother and to bring him up 'different.'

The elements working against the gang leader, the depth and sincerity of his love for Kitty, the angel of the district, the machinations of Cokey Joe, the dope fiend, and the final triumph of Jimmy Donovan provide sympathetic and convincing entertainment.

"I usually get the record I want when I come here," this a remark heard many times in our store. Currin Says So.
