

Doctor Hero in Nome Tragedy

While dog teams were mushing their way across the ice and snow of Alaska with anti-toxin serum to save the lives of the people of Nome, there was one man who fought courageously on, singlehanded, against the ravages of diphtheria. It was Dr. Curtis Welch, U. S. health officer at Nome. He had little to work with. His only hope was to prolong the lives of victims until the serum arrived. And when the dog team, driven by Gunnar Kasson, plunged through the blizzard into sight of the plague swept community, it was Dr. Welch who continued his untiring fight inoculating the victims with the life-saving serum. Here Dr. Welch is shown with his dog team at Nome.
