Who bought the Brooklyn Bridge Today?

Almost every day the Brooklyn Bridge is sold to some guillible visitor to New York. Every day someone is swindled. Selling the famous old bridge has become a national joke. Suppose, however, the City of New York decided really to sell the Brooklyn Bridge—to give the buyer the privilege of placing a toll on all who crossed it. They would advertise it for sale. And the prospective purchaser would know the offer to be genuine.

He would know that the paper would not accept the advertisement if it were intended to defraud. He would know that the advertiser would not dare advertise unless his offer were honest.

The advertisement would give the world confidence in the enterprise.

Just the advertising of all merchandise gives the world confidence in that merchandise. Only honest products can tell their stories where all may read.

That is why it pays to read advertisements. You can rely on advertised goods. You know that a worthy manufacturer stands back of them. They are a guide to better buying. They teach you to spend wisely—economically—and with the knowledge that you are buying merchandise which is minus all vain regrets or misrepresented values.

Read the advertisements every day.

Advertising is a bridge—spanning the river of doubtful values—to the shore of worthy merchandise
