CHARACTER LESSON

This is the 193d anniversary of George Washington's birth. Washington has become a heroic figure—a sort of god. So much have we idealized him we forget, at times, his human trials and temptations. We lose sight of the fact that he was "six feet three," that his hands and feet were large, his hair reddish brown, and his eyes blue. Because he was not a god is the true reason for his greatness. It is easy for gods to be models of perfection. For humans it is a task.

That Washington set aside temptations to be weak or jealous saved the colonies for freedom, and Washington for history as the father of a new country. America has much to say of him. Now comes an Englishman with lavish praise. "No nobler figure ever stood in the forefront of a nation's life," says John Richard Green, an Englishman, writing in his "History of the English People." He tells how Washington first won the confidence of his intimate friends, and that "as the fight went on, the colonists discovered what we now realize to be true: "His clear, unbiased judgment; "His heroic endurance; "His silence under difficulties; "His calmness in the face of danger or defeat; "His patience and the quickness with which he struck; "The lefty and serene sense of duty which never swerved from the task at hand through jealousy; "That never through war or peace felt the touch of a meaner ambition; "That knew no aim save guarding the freedom of his fellow countrymen, and no personal longing save returning to his own fireside when that freedom was secured."

In your acquaintance, who is silent under difficulty, patient in defeat, calm in danger, true to his purpose, disregarding temptation and jealousy, who knows no personal longing save peace, honor, and contentment for himself and his fellows? Go to him. Win his friendship. Copy his ways. Trust him. Believe in him. Honor him. He is the stuff of which heroes are made. Whatever his station in life, he is a modern Washington! Make no mistake about it.

HUNT'S WASHINGTON LETTER

By HARRY B. HUNT
NEA Service Writer

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22. — Few think of Congress in terms of religion. The public mind, in fact, more frequently connects our legislators with irreligious than with religious matters. As a matter of fact, however, the big majority in both House and Senate is of men who not only maintain church affiliations but who are consistent church goers. Congress has its full share of deacons, elders and even lay preachers. The Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which works actively with Congress in lobbying for measures designed to uplift national sobriety and morals, is preparing a card index of the next Congress which is designed to reveal the religious status of all members.

To date, all but 10 of the 521 members of House and Senate have been listed. Of the 521 members so cataloged, less than 10 per cent, or just 45, do not claim membership in any church. Of these, 25 are members of the House, 10 of the Senate. Eighteen separate creeds are represented. The Methodists lead the list with 90 representatives and 27 senators—about one-fifth of the House and more than one-fourth of the Senate.

Second come the Episcopalians, with 79, of which 57 are in the House, 22 in the Senate. The Presbyterians outnumber the Episcopalians in the House, with 63, but fall into third place because of their small representation in the Senate, there being but 11 Presbyterian senators. Baptists rank fourth in numbers, Roman Catholics fifth and Congregationalists sixth.

Utah provides the entire Mormon strength of three, Brigham Young's church claiming both Senators Smoot and King and Representative Don B. Colton. Copper of Kansas is the one Quaker credited to the Senate, but there are three Quakers in the House. The lone Christian Scientist in Congress is Laurence H. Watros of Pennsylvania.

The Coolidge hobby horse promises to provide a vehicle for jest and fun-making that will give an entirely new slant to caricature and comment concerning the president and his administration. Cartoonists and jokesmiths now have something definite and tangible with which to work. The mechanical nag on which the president goes for his daily canter presents a picturesque and tangible subject to which can be hitched a varied line of suggestions, both in picture and prose. The chances are that the Coolidge "hobby" horse will become historic.

THE LAST SOLDIER AND STILL GOING STRONG

OUT OF THE AIR

By JULIUS MUELLER
Manager, Radio Dept., Baldwin Hardware Co.

Song composers have broken out with a new war on radio. Up to a very short time ago they were willing to license stations broadcasting their music. Now they would even take away that license, even to the extent of cancelling privileges already bought and paid for.

The latest is a lobby in Washington D. C. in support of a new copyright bill supported and promoted by it is said, the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. The new copyright bill needless to say is stronger than any copyright measure ever considered before and contains of course a clause indicative of the American Society's radio throttling policy.

The bill introduced in the house of representatives by Representative Perkins, of New Jersey, has been referred to the house patents committee which likewise has been a reception committee during the last few weeks for a lobby composed of song composers, playwrights, authors and artists.

The American Society incidentally is reported with having notified broadcasters whom they have licensed that broadcasting of certain late songs, which they name must be stopped forthwith because one of their members, (Arthur Hammerstein), objects. The society even goes so far as to suggest cancellation of licenses. In explanation this means that a broadcaster has no assurance that he may broadcast the music that the society claims to control, even after he pays for a license.

There Is Comfort In Old Shoes

We all hate to give them up. They seem to fit our feet without being there at all—they know just where we want to go and they don't keep us in agony while they are getting us there.

But they get to looking so tough that we are forced to break in a new pair—when if we only knew it there is a repair shop in this town now that can fix them so they look like new—wear like new—and are like new EXCEPT they have that old shoe comfort that makes your heart sing like thoughts of the old oaken bucket or the little red school house.

Drop in today and let us show you how it is done
