PRESIDENT OF GERMANY DIES

President Ebert was the first of all the patriotic Germans to forget party lines when it became necessary to check the extremists, either in the radical or conservative camps. He frequently brought curses upon his head from the one side or the other by approving measures which they, according to their viewpoints, deemed either reactionary or too radical.

His attitude won the confidence of the ambassadors and ministers accredited to Berlin and he was a powerful factor in bringing about acceptance of the Dawes plan which promises to calm the storm that has raged about reparation payment for so many years.

Herr Ebert started life as a saddle maker, but years of experience as a labor organizer and official of unions, together with his wide training in practical politics developed him even as his admirers pointed out, the late Samuel Gompers was developed in America.

His lack of early opportunities was compensated for by the training he won in the world of affairs. He was described as no dreamy theorist, but a hard headed, tacitful leader, who made a gallant fight in behalf of the German republic and the German masses under heart breaking conditions.

Death came to the president in the West sanitarium. The public received its announcement through the half masting of flags at the foreign offices.

The news came as a shock to the Berliners, as the newspapers published bulletins indicating a marked improvement in Herr Ebert's condition and the crisis was supposed to have been passed.

A meeting of the cabinet was called for today and the Reichstag will be convened on Monday, when it will probably arrange a new election date in advance of the one scheduled for June. The choice of a regular successor to Herr Ebert will relieve Chancellor of the responsibility of carrying on the presidential duties in addition to his own office.
