Heir to Millions Learning, Not Earning, Way in World

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Mar. 27.—In a $4 a week room here Fowler McCormick, 27 year old grandson of the founder of the International Harvester fortune, declared last night that he is learning not earning his way.

Each day the heir to the McCormick millions rises at five and for ten hours works as a common laborer in the Milwaukee plant of the Harvester company, piling metal pigs into the furnace carts, going from department to department, becoming acquainted.

For several weeks young McCormick has been working, living quietly in his southside rooming house. A small room, containing an iron bed, two chairs and a dresser has been his home.

His presence and occupation came to light yesterday through Fifi Potter Stillman, wife of the former president of the National City Bank of New York who came to Milwaukee early this week. Yesterday she admitted that she had come to see her "God Son" and last night, the two had dinner at a downtown hotel.

the "flu." As yet, no cases have been serious but are soon over.

Members of the Apostolic faith are arranging to hold a series of meetings at the schoolhouse.

The woodlands are becoming dotted with vari-colored flowers which are appearing in the wake of the disappearing snows. But the flowers are not the only harbingers of spring that have appeared for the friendly little wood tick is out and ready to attach himself to some joyous hiker or flower gatherer.

CITIZENS SCOUT MURDER THEORY

Chiloquin, Wright says he then went home.

It was said that Louis Knight was seen riding the pony stolen from Pat Silver, and Freddie Jackson took it away from him, took off the saddle and started the pony for home. It was also reported that Silas Barclay was seen riding Freddie Jackson's pony, while the supposition of the Indians is that Millard Lang was riding the third pony that was stolen.

Chaps Found

One pair of chaps was found in a house just outside of Chiloquin. The man who had them said that Louis Knight had left them there.

The last seen of Freddie Jackson before the fatal ride was when he was walking toward the woods where Louis Knight, Silas Barclay and Millard Lang were supposed to have a big feast of moonshine.

Jackson apparently found Francis Jackson's little brown pony at or near the liquor rendezvous, for it was this pony and not his own on which he rode to his death.

The officials have in their possession the bridle which was used on the pony on its last ride. On one side the bridle appears to have been cut nearly in twain, while the other side shows a deep cut. One side of the bridle had snapped in two when the horse was stopped after throwing Jackson.

Club Found

The officials also have a club about two feet in length and with a big knot on one end, which they suspect might have been used in crushing Jackson's skull. This evidence was procured by James Johnson, an Indian friend of Freddie Jackson.

But there is other evidence of a fight in which the three suspected bootleggers—Barclay, Knight and Lang—engaged which did not come to light until today. This fight occurred the Saturday before Jackson's death and in about the same spot where Jackson is thought to have located the trio with his horse and their 10 gallons of moonshine.

Officer Beaten Up

It was learned today that George Crane, an Indian policeman, accompanied Knight, Barclay and Lang to their moonshine cache and took a few drinks with them in order to get evidence against them. He then placed them under arrest and picked up a gallon of moonshine which they had with them.

As he started to walk back into Chiloquin with his prisoners, one of them got behind him, hit him over the head with some blunt instrument and knocked him unconscious. They then kicked him in the face and gave him a bad beating, according to reservation authorities.

Might Have Wrong Club

The knotted club which was found in this locality might have been the one with which Crane was knocked out, according to those who investigated the case in Chiloquin.

Then on the day following Jackson's death, Knight, Barclay and Lang fell out in their reputed bootlegging operations and Knight and Barclay are said to have given Lang a severe beating. This falling out between the group of alleged bootleggers brought about their arrest. It was reported.

If Jackson had a fight with any or all of these three Indians as a result of the pony-stealing episode, there were no eye-witnesses to it, according to those in Chiloquin, and the only evidence which might tend to indicate that Jackson had been knocked unconscious and then

OPERETTA WILL BE GIVEN SOON

Under the direction of Miss Eloise McPherson, music instructor of the Klamath county high school, the operetta, "In the Garden of the Shah" will be presented on the afternoon and evening of Friday, April 3rd in the Pine Tree Theater.

The production, a musical comedy in three parts, will bring out many charming Oriental features including dances, songs and chorus numbers. "My Persian Rose" sung as a solo by Harry Peltz and later joined by the chorus, is one of the hits of the evening. There are also several synchronized numbers on the program.

With 22 chorus members and five of the students taking principal parts, the operetta is attracting considerable attention. The costumes are especially attractive. Principal roles are carried by the following: Peruvah, the Shah, Lawrence Carroll; Someraba, the Shah's daughter; Zahdah, the Shah's daughter; Josephine Meissner; Lahlah, her friend; Geraldine Mars; Nowobeh, Zahdah's nurse; La Verne Thomas; Ted Harding, from the U. S. A.; Harry Peltz; Bill Cummings, from the U. S. A.; Carl Yancey; Samuel Johnson, negro servant; Harry Molatore.

SILVER TAKEN FROM SAFE WEDNESDAY

The safe of the Pioneer Tobacco company on south Ninth street was robbed of sixteen dollars in silver Wednesday night. The burglars overlooked two five dollar gold pieces and three silver dollars hung in gold rings and used as prizes on punch boards, which were kept in another drawer of the safe. The company is uncertain whether any stock is missing or not.

The safe was unlocked, and the lock to the door was a poor one, but as it was customary to keep nothing but a little silver in the safe overnight the company had neglected to take precautions against burglary.

placed on the pony is the knotted club and the cut bridle.

May Have Fought

Against this theory is the evidence of white persons who saw Jackson's last wild ride through Chiloquin; saw him erect in his stirrups; saw him weaving from side to side; saw him jerking viciously on the reins; heard him wave a drunken salutation; saw him bend down over his horse and right the slipping saddle; and then saw him lose his balance and fall beneath the wild, plunging pony.

It is possible, according to those who investigated the case at Chiloquin, for him to have had a fight with the trio of suspected bootleggers, but he was conscious on his last ride, and it was the fall that killed him, not any fractured skull before the ride was started.

It is a more plausible theory, it was said, that Jackson had met the trio at their moonshine rendezvous, had filled up on the fiery moonshine and then mounted his pony for the wild dash through the streets of Chiloquin.

Exhumation

It was announced this afternoon that Jackson's body will be exhumed tomorrow afternoon in order that a post-mortem examination might be made. But around Chiloquin the feeling prevails that it was moonshine and not a knotted pine club which caused his death.
