NEW TAX BILL

California has been hailed as the paradise of the tax-dodgers, and it was even proposed to prohibit certain taxes in Oregon for the purpose of dividing some of this patronage with California. The reasoning was that it was too far to Florida and that some of those people might come up to Oregon to live if we out-Heroded Herod, which is of course, not likely to happen, but California has hit the transient tax dodgers a blow, those who are there temporarily, and pretending to be permanent residents.

Last fall a constitutional amendment was adopted and the legislature has just passed a law putting that in effect. The new law provides for the taxation of foreign securities at 7 per cent of their full cash value. The measure requires that the taxation of these securities held by residents of California shall be on the basis of 7 per cent assessment, but they also shall pay any local, county and city tax rates.

If this is not a blow straight between the eyes of the men who make their fortunes elsewhere and then try to deprive those communities from the benefits of taxing the property, it would be hard to find what would be. The fact of the case is that this dodging around to prevent taxation is so unfair that it is revolting even to the recipients of it.—Salem Statesman.

HUNT'S WASHINGTON LETTER

By HARR YB. HUNT
NEA Service Writer

WASHINGTON, Mar. 27.—Much has been said and will be said as to the influence of "partisanship" in the action by the Senate in twice rejecting the nomination of Charles Beecher Warren to be United States attorney general.

The cry of "partisanship" is easily raised. It is difficult to refute. It is a charge that easily catches the public attention, and in the absence of a full understanding of a given situation is likely to be accepted by the public as the chief basis on which opposition is founded.

It is most probable that the country now believes and will continue to believe that partisanship was the controlling factor in the struggle over the Warren appointment.

That it was a factor, no one who knows politics and human nature will doubt. But that it was the controlling factor, anyone who followed the development of the fight will privately if not publicly deny.

The question that should always be balanced against the view that the 46 votes against Warren were purely partisan votes is: "To what degree were the 39 votes cast favorably to Mr. Warren influenced by similarly partisan considerations?"

The truth would be, of course that partisanship played equally as dominant a part in the fight to put Warren across as it did in the fight to block his confirmation.

The lack of enthusiasm over the Warren appointment, on the republican side of the senate, was at all times strikingly evident.

Warren is no more popular with a lot of the older republican wing in the senate than he is with the Michigan representation in congress.

And his fellow Michiganders turned thumbs down on him.

One staunch G. O. P. publication, which made a poll of republican senators, reported that only five members could be registered as out-and-out Warren supporters.

The other 34, the inference being, were voting for him because of party regularity, on the theory that the president ought to have a free hand in naming his own cabinet.

If nothing else, the result has demonstrated that the "safe party control" the president was said to hold in the new senate has gone glimmering before any legislation has been brought before that body.

For not only did the four "insurgents" who have been expelled from the G. O. P. family by the senate caucus—La Follette, Ladd, Frazier and Bronckart—vote against the president's dearest desire, but seven others stepped out of the party lineup to record their opposition. These were: Borah, Couzens, Howell, Johnson, Norbeck, Norris and McMaster.

With Shipstead, a Farm-Labor senator, this makes a total of 12 votes that may, as they desire, express a veto on administration plans. With the democratic strength of 49, this group, which already has forfeited administration favor, can effectively block any G. O. P. proposals that are too conservatively partisan."

AT THE LIBERTY

The title of a new picture that comes to the Liberty Theater today, is "Cupid's Brand." It is a western photoplay story and has the well-known Jack Hoxie as its star. This title has been attractive enough to arouse editorial comment in the daily papers of other towns in which it has been previously shown. This editorial comment has been based on the question: "What is Cupid's brand?"

In "Border Justice" the third of a series starring Bill Cody, the Liberty is offering a picture which, while characterized by the vigorous action and melodramatic villainy of the usual Western, belongs to the class of stories in which the plot hinges around the romance of a border ranger whose rival is engaged in smuggling contraband.

A brother against brother, and a love, versus duty angle have been injected when the ranger is sent out to arrest his blacksheep brother for murder, and the story is further complicated by the fact that the girl's father is under moral obligations to the villain as he has advanced money for her education.

Photographic interviews will also be shown tonight.

AT THE PINE TREE

Noah Beery has won a film fight at last!

This brawny athlete, one of the outstanding villains of the screen, a mighty man who towers six feet one inch ceilingward and who weighs 210 pounds, won his first battle since he entered motion pictures when he trounced Raymond McKee in "Contraband," Alan Crosland's newest production for Paramount, coming to the Pine Tree next Sunday and Monday.

For sixteen years Beery has used his massive jaw as a shock absorber for the punches delivered in the last reel by the hero. Nearly every prominent leading man has bruised his knuckles on Beery's chin.

The noted villain's great moment arrived in one of the thrilling scenes of "Contraband," in which he subdued the hero, McKee. The fight was as realistic as McKee, Beery and Crosland could make it and took nearly seven hours in filmpipe.

When "Contraband" went into production and Beery, Sr. was advised that for once he was to emerge the victor in a film contest, he decided to let Noah, Jr. in on the news.

OUT OF THE AIR

In testing audio transformers it is impossible to give them a thorough test without especially designed apparatus. However it will sometimes be convenient to give them rough tests in the field which will show such defects as open circuits, or grounded terminals. Connect one tip of a pair of head phones to the 1 1/2 volt terminal of the B battery and a wire to the 2 1/2 volt terminal of the B battery, this wire must be insulated. Without touching the wire with the bare hand hold it against the case of the transformer making contact to the bare metal. Touch the free tip of the head phones to the terminals on that side of the transformer to which the wire is connected. Repeat on the other side of the transformer, a click indicates that the terminal to which the connection is made is grounded to the frame. This can be corrected sometimes by moving the screw into the center of the opening in the case so that it is properly insulated with washers.

Using the same battery connection connect the wire from the positive terminal of the battery to one of the primary terminals of the transformer, and touch the free tip of the head phones to the other primary terminal. A loud click will be heard but not as loud as when the phones are directly connected and shorted across the battery. If a loud click such as is obtained on short circuit, is heard the primary is shorted. If no click is heard the primary is open. Repeat on secondary terminals of the transformer, in this case the click will be much weaker.
