Crater Hi-Jinks Show to Go Off With Bang Tonight

Final rehearsal of the Crater Lake Shrine club Hi-Jinks was held last night, and if any errors were noticeable they were corrected previously in the show, for every act was presented as clock work, the melody maids were in perfect voice and the show, which will be given tonight in the Scandinavian hall, promises to outclass anything of the sort presented in Klamath Falls. More than 400 tickets have been sold, according to W. C. Van Emon and no reservations made. The curtain rises at 8:15.

To full regalia, the Crater Lake Shrine club opens the initial act with the bugle and drum corps playing a choice selection of marches under the leadership of J. H. Rhodes, captain of the corps.

"Carl and Walter", the two Van Emon children, are presented in an act of their very own, surprising even their intimate friends with their ability to handle musical instruments.

Third Act Fine
Judged by many who saw the review last night, the third act is the meat of the show. With Harold W. Bell and a bevy of cleverly frocked girls an old time song review is presented that the flapper and the grandmother will equally appreciate. "Peggy O'Neil" as Edna Kent is a sly Irish lass, with much green in evidence. As "June", Miss Ferne

Hanks could not be better cast and the Trail of the Lonesome Pine is carried out well with Miss Hanks and Mr. Bell. The "Sunshine of Virginia" is cleverly portrayed by Pearl Barth, frocked in an orchid frock of satin teasingly pretty in her tantalizing part. Garbed as a Red Cross nurse, Bertha Massey enters into the spirit of "The Rose of No Man's Land" that popular ballad during the World War.

"The Girl of the Gingham Gown" is portrayed actively by Blanche Bechtel who goes through the intricate steps accompanying the part with ease. "Mother" is brought out by Lena Dennis, who takes the part of the theme of the song to perfection. The bride, the last one to enter to the review, is Hazel Pease, appearing as demureness personified in her white satin frock and flowing white veil. In a finale the act is concluded with the six melody maids doing a bit of chorus work. They are Nell Elliott, Venice Moore, Mae Young, Ann Malley, Marjorie Wortley and Alisa Massey.

"Old Home Town"
"My Old Home Town" is the name of the fourth act, which Frank Confer brings to Klamath Falls as one of his portrayals that he used on his eastern tour. Miss Ruth Lindsey as the girl can not receive too much praise for her part and Johnny Houston, as the boy who tried to be a preacher but turned out to be a hard boiled Broadway egg, is the kick of the show. Confer as the father, brings out the personification of his own father whom he fitted as the part.

In a group of song varieties, Miss Alysce Hansen and Orin E. Roberts will be presented. Miss Hansen will be remembered in other features and Roberts, who tickles a mean accordian in Johnny Houston's orchestra is some one you don't want to miss.

"Irish Justice" Scream
Under the direction of Frank Confer the sixth act is named "Irish Justice" with George Barnhardt as Judge Casey, the wittiest Irish judge who ever sat on a bench and had an eye for pretty women. R. J. Dunn as the prosecuting attorney, has a hard time to keep up with Lawyer Hum whose part is taken by R. E. Crego. Allen Jones the Police Officer is very adept in the act of throwing fits as is George Metz, the "Mac" with the fits. The girls in the act were well chosen. Zella Jones as the Show Girl; Gertrude Glover as the Charitable Lady and Jessie Emmons as the wifful Hungry Child.

The final act is the climax of the vaudeville when Houston, Bell and Confer, attired in burlesque Shrine costumes render a number of ballads and jazz numbers with a finale of "Follow the Swallow Back Home."

In five of the seven acts there is a change of scenery, the initial opening with drapes and drops of the Shrine colors, red, green and yellow with huge red festes of Hillah in evidence.

May Be Shown Again
The entire show was under the direction of John Houston, Frank Confer and Harold Bell, with Harry Howard as the stage manager and in charge of the splendid lighting system. Barney J. Kropp arranged the musical numbers with great success.

According to W. C. Van Emon, if the show warrants another presentation, it will be shown in the near future, this depending on the patrons this evening.

A New Achievement in Decorative Fabrics With the Feeling of the Old Hand-Done Prints

None of that impersonal quality of machine work can be discerned in the exquisite yet sturdy Town and Country Cretonnes. Made by an exclusive process, they have the enticing individual air of old hand-blocked prints.

Their color schemes and designs are as varied as they are pleasing. They will lend grace and charm to almost any style of decoration and give to a room the delightful quality of "personality."

Your inspection of our showing of these fabrics will increase your admiration for the progress of American textiles. You will find them surprisingly moderate in price—and unusually dependable in lasting quality.

LITERATURE TO BE DISTRIBUTED SOON

Arrangements have been made with A. D. Helms, conductor of a service station at the junction of the Klamath Falls-Ashland highway to distribute literature during the summer months to the tourists on their way to and from Klamath Falls. The plan was one of the Klamath chamber of commerce who also arranged with Helms to take charge of the turning on and off of the lights of the sign at the Junction highway. The reason for erecting the sign, according to Lynn Sabin of the Klamath chamber, is due to the fact that the highway to Klamath Falls turns so abruptly from the main highway that many tourists mistake their way and continue past the junction.
